This book offers a comprehensive review of the far reaching social changes that have taken place since the start of the Chinese economic reform and opening up of Chinese society over 30 years ago. As such it examines various aspects of the social transformation of China from urbanization, population aging and social governance to family structure, youth society and social mentality. It identifies major issues and challenges emerging during the process of the great social change and proposes solutions to aid in future strategic planning. The analysis is supported by a wealth of empirical data collected in the course of extended social survey research. The book also provides a systematic summary of the most important research findings from the past few years, helping readers to understand and interpret the ongoing and complex process of transformation in Chinese society.

Social Change and the Family in Taiwan Arland Thornton, Hui-Sheng Lin, 1994. Until the 1940s, social life in Taiwan was generally organized through the family; marriages were arranged by parents, for example, and senior males held authority. In the following years, as Taiwan evolved rapidly from an agrarian to an industrialized society, individual decisions became less dependent on the family and more influenced by outside forces. Social Change and the Family in Taiwan provides an in-depth analysis of the complex changes in family relations in a society undergoing revolutionary social and economic transformation. This interdisciplinary study explores the patterns and causes of change in education, work, income, leisure time, marriage, living arrangements, and interactions among extended kin. Theoretical chapters enunciate a theory of family and social change centered on the life course and modes of social organization. Other chapters look at the shift from arranged marriages toward love matches, as well as changes in dating practices, premarital sex, fertility and divorce. Contributions to the book are made by Jui Shan Chang, Ming Cheng Chang, Deborah S. Freedman, Ronald Freedman, Thomas E. Fricke, Albert Hermalin, Mei Lin Lee, Paul K. C. Liu, Hui Sheng Lin, Te Hsiung Sun, Arland Thornton, Maxine Weinstein, and Li Shou Yang.

An Aging World Barbara Boyle Torrey, Kevin G. Kinsella, Cynthia Murray Taeuber,1987 A Generation of Change Jacob S. Siegel,1993-02-18 A Generation of Change is an exceptional study of the nation's elderly a population that has undergone profound changes in the years since World War II As modern medicine extends the average life span and the baby boom generation begins to approach middle age the number of older Americans is expected to more than double in the next century Currently 75 percent of U S health care expenditures go toward the elderly But as national trends toward early retirement and low birthrate continue an aging American population could face crises in meeting their financial and physical needs According to Jacob S Siegel in A Generation of Change astute public planning must be informed by an understanding of the demographic social and economic characteristics of the older population as it is today and as it will be in the coming years Siegel employs census and survey data from 1950 through the mid 1980s to describe a population constantly shifting in its ethnic and gender composition geographic distribution marital and living arrangements health employment and economic status Surprisingly there is tremendous disparity in the quality of life among the elderly Although their average poverty rate is below that of the general population there are dramatic levels of poverty among older women who are far more likely than men to live alone or in institutions As the elderly progress from the young old to the aged old those over 85 sharp differences emerge as income and employment decrease and degrees of chronic illness increase In addition residential location

influences the quality of health care and public assistance available to the elderly an effect that may account for the marked migration of older people to Florida and Arizona Siegel analyzes the full range of characteristics for this heterogeneous population and through comparisons with other age groups as well as with the elderly of the previous decades portrays the crucial influence of social and economic conditions over the life course on the quality of later life With our elderly population growing more numerous and long lived accurate information about them is increasingly essential A Generation of Change will serve as a valuable resource for policymakers seeking more effective solutions in critical areas such as housing long term health care and the funding of Social Security and retirement programs A Volume in the Russell Sage Foundation Census Series Grand Challenges of Our Aging Society National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Center for Economic, Governance, and International Studies, 2010-04-04 Aging populations are generating both challenges and opportunities for societies around the globe Increases in longevity and improvements in health raise many questions What steps can be taken to optimize physical and cognitive health and productivity across the life span How will older people finance their retirement and health care What will be the macroeconomic implications of an aging population How will communities be shaped by the shift in age structure What global interconnections will affect how each society handles the aging of its population To address these questions the National Academies organized a symposium summarized in the present volume to determine how best to contribute to an evidence based dialogue on population aging that will shape policies and programs Presentations in the fields of biology public health medicine informatics macroeconomics finance urban planning and engineering approached the challenges of aging from many different angles The presenters reviewed the current state of knowledge in their respective fields identifying areas of consensus and controversy and delineating the priority questions for further research and policy development
