Hauver, 1991 Measuring Productivity in African Agriculture Simeon Ehui, 2002-01-01 This paper argues that partial productivity measures are inappropriate and at times misleading for assessing the performance of agricultural production technologies and systems This is especially true where substantial changes in resource stock and flows accompany the production process Superlative index based total factor productivity measures are a more appropriate technique to compare production efficiency and sustainability of alternative systems Mathematical formulations of intertemporal and interspatial total factor productivity measures with and without considering changes in resource stock and flows are shown Then three case studies from sub Saharan Africa in which this approach was applied are reviewed These studies show that total factor productivity measures are biased if changes in resource stock and flows are not appropriately accounted for in intertemporal comparisons and differences in input intensity are not accounted agricultural science has contributed with others to growth in agricultural productivity in many other countries as well as the United States. The world's population more than doubled from around 3 billion in 1961 to 6.54 billion in 2006. U.S. Census Bureau 2009. Over the same period production of important grain crops including maize, wheat and rice almost trebled such that global per capita grain production was 18 percent higher in 2006.

Agricultural Productivity in the United States

Mary Ahearn, 1998. Agricultural productivity in Africa. Benin, Samuel, 2016-07-14. Agricultural Productivity in Africa: Trends, Patterns and Determinants presents updated and new analyses of land, labor and total productivity trends in African agriculture. It brings together analyses of a unique mix of data sources and evaluations of public policies and development projects to recommend ways to increase agricultural productivity in Africa. This book is timely in light of the recent and ongoing growth recovery across the continent. The good news is that agricultural productivity in Africa increased at a moderate rate between 1961 and 2012, although there are variations in the rate of growth in land, labor and total factor productivities depending on country and region. Differences in input use and capital intensities in agricultural production in the various farming systems and agricultural productivity zones also affect advancements in technology. One conclusion based on the book's research findings derives from the substantial spatial variation in agricultural productivity. For areas with similar agricultural productivity growth trends and factors, what works well in one area can be used as the basis for formulating best fit, location specific agricultural policies, investments and interventions in similar areas. This finding along with others will be of particular interest to policy and decisionmakers.

ERS Staff Report, 1991. Pesticide Policy, Production Risk, and Producer Welfare. John M. Antle, 2015-07-30. The use of pesticides to control agricultural pests both benefits farm production and imposes health and environmental costs on producers and society. This title first published in 1988 includes an application of the author's methodology to tomato production in which Antle illuminates the roles that alternative methods of pest management play in producer welfare. He also develops a more general empirical framework for studying producer welfare under uncertainty, a framework in which production risk, sequential decision making and attitudes toward risk are integrated. This title will be of interest to students of environmental studies.
