Aids And Malignancies:

Cancers in People with HIV and AIDS Robert Yarchoan, 2014-07-10 The association between AIDS and cancer was recognized from the beginning of the AIDS epidemic when the appearance of Kaposi sarcoma in a cluster of young men was one of the first signs of this new disease It was soon recognized that AIDS was caused by infection with a novel virus HIV and that AIDS patients are prone to develop a number of AIDS defining cancers Kaposi sarcoma lymphoma and cervical cancer The development of effective combination anti HIV therapy starting around 1996 converted AIDS from a death sentence to a manageable disease and led to dramatic shifts in the epidemic As this therapy was able to improve immune function in patients the incidence of most AIDS defining cancers decreased There is a misconception however that AIDS has gone away In fact as AIDS patients are living longer the number of AIDS patients has more than doubled in the United States since 1996 and the AIDS population overall has increased in age Also as AIDS patients are less likely to die of other complications cancer is coming to the forefront as one of the most common causes of death in regions where AIDS drugs are widely available Moreover the three AIDS defining cancers are now taking a back seat to a number of other HIV associated cancers such as Hodgkin lymphoma lung cancer and anal cancer In the developing world AIDS associated cancers are a major public health problem and in some regions of sub Saharan Africa Kaposi sarcoma is the most common tumor in men In recent years there has been a vast increase in our understanding of HIV associated cancers We now know for example that most are caused by other viruses and that the main role of HIV and immunodeficiency is to provide a supportive environment for the viruses to multiply and for the cancers to develop But there remain a number of unanswered questions and a need for improved prevention and therapy In the 28 chapters of this book written by some of the most renowned experts in this field we present up to date information on the cancers associated with HIV infection The chapters cover the epidemiology of these cancers their pathogenesis their clinical presentation and their treatment The book will be of value to physicians other medical professionals students and researchers with an interest in AIDS viral associated cancers or HIV associated malignancies

Viral and Immunological Malignancies Paul Volberding, 2006 The precise relationship between viral infection and malignancy remains an epidemiologic association and the subject of active investigation Nonmalignant hematologic disorders have a similarly complex relationship with cancer associated viruses and may offer insight into the pathogenesis of oncogenesis This book explores the relationships between viral infections immune impairments and the hematologic and malignant diseases particularly against the backdrop of the HIV epidemic By extending the scope to all of viral oncology the editors provide an invaluable resource on tumors related to other viruses other than HIV particularly carcinomas of the cervix and anus with HPV and tumors of the liver with the various hepatitis viruses

HIV & HTLV-I Associated Malignancies Joseph A. Sparano, 2012-12-06 Infection with the human immunodeficiency virus HIV and human T cell lymphotropic virus type I HTLV I is known to be associated with an increased risk of neoplastic disorders especially Kaposi s sarcoma and aggressive B cell lymphoma for the former and T cell lymphoma for the latter The information obtained from the study of these infections has led to remarkable advances in our understanding of the immune system as well as the biology of human neoplasms The management of malignant diseases in such patients also poses substantial challenges to clinicians This book provides an overview of the epidemiology biology clinical features and clinical management of neoplasms occurring in such individuals It is an important resource for clinicians treating these diseases and for basic scientists who have an interest in this field

Cancer and AIDS Christopher Kwesi O. Williams, 2018-10-30 The lifestyles and socio economic status that are prevalent in regions of the world with limited resources form the background for the unique features of neoplastic diseases in these areas where the majority of the world population lives The predominance of the world's retroviral burden of in these areas further compounds the nature and challenges of the cancer there Much of the international cancer literature covers the nature and challenges of the disease as seen in high income regions of the world thereby giving a skewed view of the global cancer challenges As the low and middle income regions of the world transition from communicable to non communicable disease patterns there is a need for a corresponding paradigm shift with increased emphasis on what the world needs to know about non communicable diseases including cancer where the disease is hitherto poorly documented The main goal of the proposed book is to contribute to this outcomes

Molecular Basis for Therapy of AIDS-Defining Cancers Dirk P. Dittmer, Susan E. Krown, 2010-06-14 Cancer incidences increase in people living with HIV AIDS Over 2 million people currently live with HIV AIDS in the US This number will increase as HAART prolongs the average lifespan and as at least in some states the number of new HIV infections increase again As this population ages their incidence rates for cancer will increase as well Recently new rational targets for cancer therapy have emerged But their application to the care of HIV patients is slow because of concerns about the weakened immune status of the patients because of possible drug interactions with HAART and because some of the AIDS defining cancer are rare
