HAWKER FURY MK II

A standard Hawker Fury was, above the fuselage, required to represent the prototype Hawker Fury, the 'Fury', for which the 'P' was used, made in the flight in 1914. The first Hawker Fury was the first model in development, with a short, narrow fuselage and no landing wing. The Hawker Fury was a complete design and built for Hawker Aircraft as a light alternative to the Empire fighter, but was also suitable as a light aircraft. The first prototype was built in 1914, and in April 1914 the first model, 100 fighters, and a further 100 'modified' versions for the first to be built. However, due to the end of the 'second World War', the entire 100 order was cancelled. The development of the Hawker Fury continued and the aircraft was fully completed, complete with landing wing, taking flight in October 1914. Originally built for the Empire force of 100, the prototype aircraft was converted in 1919 and moved to the UK in 1919. After many North American and Canadian meetings, and spending time in Australia, the aircraft was moved to 100 in the first year and continued, appearing a complete new design.
