

Chapter 2 Animal Conservation in the Twenty-First Century

Hugh A. H. Jansman

Abstract Biodiversity on Earth is rapidly decreasing and the situation in the Netherlands is in that perspective a textbook example. The main causes for species extinction are habitat loss, landscape degradation and overuse. Conservation efforts should focus more on the level of viable ecosystems. A strategic plan to do so is called Cores, Corridors and Carnivores (rewilding's three C's). This requires strong Cores of nature, mutually connected via robust Corridors. Based on island biogeography theory it can be calculated that if we want to conserve roughly 85% of the current biodiversity, 50% of the Earth's surface needs to be protected, 'Nature needs half'. For healthy ecosystems we need to get top-down forcing by apex consumers back in ecosystems. These apex consumers are mainly large Carnivores, and bringing them back asks for coexistence. If we want to keep our living conditions on planet Earth healthy we have to change our unsustainable way of living and change our way of thinking with respect to nature, natural processes and our relation with other species. The loss of biodiversity can only be halted or reversed if we save more space for nature and natural processes including top-down forcing and last but not least, find a way of coexistence with our fellow creatures.

2.1 Introduction

Conditions for life as we know it are exceptionally favourable on Earth compared to other known planets in the universe. In billions of years, evolution has created a very rich biodiversity. Biodiversity includes biological variation, whether it is at a genetic, species, population or community level, or even at their ecosystem-level interactions (Wilson 1992). Yet, the biodiversity that happens to coexist with us humans being, the dominant life form in the so-called Anthropocene, faces the 6th mass extinction (see Bovenkerk and Keulartz in this Volume). World Wildlife Fund (WWF) reported

The Exploitation of Mammal Populations V.J. Taylor, N. Dunstone, 2012-12-06 Human exploitation of other mammals has passed through three historical phases distinct in their ecological significance though overlapping in time Initially Homo sapiens was a predator particularly of herbivores but also of fur bearing predators From about 11 000 years ago goats and sheep were domesticated in the Middle East rapidly replacing gazelles and other game as the principal source of meat The principal crops including wheat and barley were taken into agriculture at about the same time and the resulting Neolithic farming culture spread slowly from there over the subsequent 10 500 years In a few places such as Mexico Peru and China this Middle Eastern culture met and merged with agricultural traditions that had made a similar but independent transition These agricultural traditions provided the essential support for the industrial revolution and for a third phase of industrial exploitation of mammals In this chapter these themes are drawn out and their ecological significance is investigated Some of the impacts of humans on other mammals require consideration on a world wide basis but the chapter concentrates parochially on Great Britain What have been the ecological consequences of our exploitation of other mammals

Savannas and Dry Forests Jayalaxshmi Mistry,Andrea Berardi,2006 Parched landscapes biodiversity loss encroaching deserts and deforestation are some of the environmental crises taking place in tropical savannas and dry forests throughout the world However unless we understand the human environment relationship in these regions we will never truly identify the causes or be able to provide solutions This book therefore focuses on the roles of the past present and future human perceptions and actions on savannas and dry forests      Sustainability in the Twenty-First Century Mohan

Redford,Steven Sanderson,1998-07 Using the experience of the Parks in Peril program a wide ranging project instituted by The Nature Conservancy and its partner organizations in Latin America and the Caribbean to foster better park management this book presents a broad analysis of current trends in park management and the implications for biodiversity conservation It examines the context of current park management and challenges many commonly held views from social political and ecological perspectives The book argues that biodiversity conservation is inherently political sustainable use has limitations as a primary tool for biodiversity conservation effective park protection requires understanding the social context at varying scales of analysis actions to protect parks need a level of conceptual rigor that has been absent from recent programs built around slogans and stereotypesNine case studies highlight the interaction of ecosystems local peoples and policy in park management and describe the context of field based conservation from the perspective of those actually implementing the programs Parks in Peril builds from the case studies and specific park level concerns to a synthesis of findings from the sites The editors draw on the case studies to challenge popular conceptions about parks and describe future directions that can ensure long term biodiversity conservation Throughout contributors argue that protected areas are extremely important for the protection of biodiversity yet such areas cannot be expected to serve as the sole means of biodiversity conservation Requiring them to carry the entire burden of conservation is a recipe for ecological and social disaster      Libraries in the
