In exploring the sculptural potential of the plinth, I'm interested in how it is a mechanism in both art and construction for elevating things.
What seem like permanent solid edifices reveal themselves to be hollow and fragile.
