Reviews Of Accelerator Science And Technology - Volume 5: Applications Of Superconducting Technology To Accelerators Alexander Wu Chao, Weiren Chou, 2013-01-28 Over the past several decades major advances in accelerators have resulted from breakthroughs in accelerator science and accelerator technology After the introduction of a new accelerator physics concept or the implementation of a new technology a leap in accelerator performance followed A well known representation of these advances is the Livingston chart which shows an exponential growth of accelerator performance over the last seven or eight decades One of the breakthrough accelerator technologies that support this exponential growth is superconducting technology Recognizing this major technological advance we dedicate Volume 5 of Reviews of Accelerator Science and Technology RAST to superconducting technology and its applications Two major applications are superconducting magnets SC magnets and superconducting radio frequency SRF cavities SC magnets provide much higher magnetic field than their room temperature counterparts thus allowing accelerators to reach higher energies with comparable size as well as much reduced power consumption SRF technology allows field energy storage for continuous wave applications and energy recovery in addition to the advantage of tremendous power savings and better particle beam quality In this volume we describe both technologies and their applications We also include discussion of the associated R D in superconducting materials and the future prospects for these technologies Transactions on

White, 2021-10-08 The High Plains region was once called the Great American Desert and thought to be in the words of explorer Stephen Long wholly unfit for cultivation Now we know that beneath the surface unbeknownst to the explorers and early settlers lies the Ogallala aquifer an underground formation that stretches for 800 miles from the Texas panhandle to South Dakota It holds more water than Lake Huron Indeed the Ogallala has been referred to as the sixth Great Lake It is the water pumped for irrigation from the Ogallala that has enabled a naturally dry region to produce up to 40 percent of America s beef and 20 to 25 percent of its food and fiber an output worth about 20 billion In the forty years since the invention of center pivot irrigation the High Plains aquifer system has been depleted at an astonishing rate In 1978 the volume of water pumped from the aquifer exceeded the annual flow of the Colorado River In Texas water levels are down 200 feet in some areas In Kansas

700 miles of rivers that once flowed year round no longer flow at all In short the High Plains may be becoming the desert it was once thought to be Is it too late to solve the problem Geographers David Kromm and Stephen White assembled nine of the most knowledgeable scholars and water professionals in the Great Plains to help answer that question The result is a collection of essays that insightfully examine the dilemmas of groundwater use From a variety of perspectives they address both the technical problems and the politics of water management to provide a badly needed analysis of the implications of large scale irrigation They have included three case studies the Nebraska Sand Hills Northwestern Kansas and West Texas Kromm and White provide an introduction and conclusion to the volume Current Literature on Science of Science ,1997
