Ecocriticism Adam J. Goldwyn, 2017-11-29 Byzantine Ecocriticism Women Nature and Power in the Medieval Greek Romance applies literary ecocriticism to the imaginative fiction of the Greek world from the twelfth to fifteenth centuries Through analyses of hunting gardening bride stealing and warfare Byzantine Ecocriticism exposes the attitudes and behaviors that justified human control over women nature and animals the means by which such control was exerted and the anxieties surrounding its limits Adam Goldwyn thus demonstrates the ways in which intersectional ecocriticism feminism and posthumanism can be applied to medieval texts and illustrates how the legacies of medieval and Byzantine environmental practice and ideology continue to be relevant to contemporary ecological and environmental concerns Women of the Byzantine Empire Layla Gupta, The lives of women in Byzantine society were shaped by a complex interplay of tradition law religion and social class While patriarchal norms dictated many aspects of daily life women were far from passive figures confined to the background They were active participants in family economic religious and even political spheres albeit often within carefully defined boundaries Byzantine society rooted in Roman law and Christian values placed a strong emphasis on the family unit Women were expected to marry bear children and manage the household Marriage was often arranged and served both familial and economic purposes Despite these constraints women played an essential role within the home They managed domestic affairs oversaw servants and made decisions related to household finances In wealthier families women were often educated and could own property inherit land and engage in business though these privileges were more limited for lower class women The public lives of women were more restricted Elite women were expected to remain within the private sphere rarely appearing in public without a veil or escort However these ideals were not always followed strictly especially in urban centers like Constantinople Markets churches and festivals provided spaces where women could move more freely Lower class women in particular had greater visibility in public life often working as vendors midwives and artisans to support their families
