Smith,2014-08-15 Throughout this first century of air power military theorists have proposed numerous schemes as the best use of air power Airmen of many nations tried and tested these theories in wars large and small and they have learned ignored or forgotten many lessons Of the four major coercive mechanisms available to air power punishment risk military denial and decapitation Robert Pape in Bombing to Win concludes that military denial is the best use of air power Furthermore Pape argues that recent technological advances only enhance the military denial mechanism In his appendix Pape categorizes the Italian case as another case of successful military denial This study examines the collapse of Italy in 1943 and the contribution of air power to this collapse Several broad works often citing Ernest May in Lessons from the Past claim that air power decisively caused the Italian surrender but do not indisputably argue this point nor do they define the coercive mechanism s air power employed to achieve this result Studies such as the U S Strategic Bombing Survey or the British Bombing Survey Unit largely ignore Italy or in the case of F W Deakin s The Brutal Friendship cite the coalition politics as the primary cause of Italy s surrender In an era of clean conflict both painless and quick leaders and airman downplay the psychological effects of air power with the exception of the questionable negative effects of casualties on the democracies Operation DESERT STORM typifies both these effects Furthermore attrition based computer wargame simulations largely ignore the human element The collapse of Italy serves as one example where the psychological effects of air power outweighed the physical damage caused by bombing Quarterly Review of Military Literature ,1939 Review of Current Military Literature ,1929
