A.V. Dicey Albert Venn Dicey, 2009 Albert Venn Dicey 1835 1922 was elected to the Vinerian professorship of English Law in the University of Oxford in 1882 Dicey established himself as a great expert on constitutional history when in 1885 he published his Introduction to the Study of the Law of the Constitution a major classic on the British constitutional system Dicey's writings have achieved an almost canonical status and his views are judged almost entirely on this volume However Dicey developed his views further and extensively in a series of lectures he delivered in the late 1890s in which he focused his thoughts on the sovereignty of Parliament the relationship between Parliament and the people and the role of constitutional conventions Dicey would not defend every detail of the British Constitution but was quite prepared to consider certain constitutional innovations such as the principle of referendum to give special status to Constitutional Acts or that the House of Lords should have more representative legitimacy Dicey also toyed with the idea of a Constitutional Convention as a basic form of protection for constitutional rules he argued about constitutional safeguards to remedy the defects of the party system and recognised the adaptability of an unwritten constitution to changed circumstances All these aspects of Dicey's thought are reflected in these lectures published here for the first time

The Separation of Powers in the Contemporary Constitution Roger Masterman, 2010-12-02 In this 2010 book Roger Masterman examines the dividing lines between the powers of the judicial branch of government and those of the executive and legislative branches in the light of two of the most significant constitutional reforms of recent years the Human Rights Act 1998 and Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Both statutes have implications for the separation of powers within the United Kingdom constitution The Human Rights Act brings the judges into much closer proximity with the decisions of political actors than previously permitted by the Wednesbury standard of review and the doctrine of parliamentary sovereignty while the Constitutional Reform Act marks the emergence of an institutionally independent judicial branch Taken together the two legislative schemes form the backbone of a more comprehensive system of constitutional checks and balances policed by a judicial branch underpinned by the legitimacy of institutional independence

Devolution, Law Making and the Constitution Robert Hazell, Richard Rawlings, 2015-12-01 Law making is a primary function of government and how well the three devolved UK legislatures exercise this function will be a crucial test of the whole devolution project This book provides the first systematic study and authoritative data to start that assessment It represents the fruits of a four year collaboration between top constitutional lawyers from Scotland Wales and Northern Ireland and leading researchers in UCL's Constitution Unit The book opens with detailed studies of law making in the period 1999-2004 in the Scottish Parliament and the Assemblies in Wales and Northern Ireland and how they interact with Westminster Later contributions look at aspects of legislative partnership in the light of the UK's strongly asymmetric devolutionary development and also explain the unexpected impact of devolution on the courts Individual chapters focus on various constitutional aspects of law making examining the interplay of continuity and change in political legal and administrative practice and the competing pressures for convergence and divergence between the different parliaments and assemblies This book is essential reading for academics and students in law and in politics and for anyone interested in the constitutional and legal aspects of UK devolution not least the practitioners and policymakers in London Edinburgh Cardiff and Belfast
