GRAMMAR Conditionals

The verbs in conditional sentences show:

- the time frame (present, present/future, or past).
- whether the conditions are real (true) or unreal (not true; imaginary).

Present/future real conditionals: There is a real possibility the condition will happen, or it can, should, or might happen.

If clause = present tense form

Result = will, can, might, should + base verb

- If they want better infrastructure, they should hire an urban planner.
- They will not build tall buildings if the public doesn't want them.

Present/future unreal conditionals: The condition is not true now, so the results are not true either.

If clause = past tense form

Result = would, might + base verb

- If the city had less traffic, we wouldn't need better public transportation.
- Anton might move to a rural area if his job weren't in the city.

Past unreal conditionals: The condition was not true before; the result in the past or the present is not true either.

If clause = past perfect form

Result = would, could, might + base verb (present results)

would have, could have, might have + past participle (past results)

- If they had asked pedestrians about for their opinions, no one would be angry now.
- If the majority had voted for extra funding, we could have had a new park.
