

Alcohol in the Americas

Alcohol consumption in the Americas has been a topic of significant public health concern. The World Health Organization (WHO) reports that alcohol is a leading preventable cause of death and disability worldwide. In the Americas, alcohol consumption is high, with per capita consumption rates among the highest in the world. This has led to a high burden of alcohol-related diseases, including liver disease, heart disease, and cancer. Public health efforts to reduce alcohol consumption have included taxation, regulation of alcohol marketing, and education campaigns. However, these efforts have been largely ineffective, and alcohol consumption continues to rise in many parts of the Americas.
