

BIOLOGY

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE

What is Biology?

Biology is the study of life and living organisms. It is a branch of science that deals with the characteristics, functions, and interactions of living organisms. Biology is a vast field that encompasses many different areas of study, including botany, zoology, and molecular biology.

Characteristics of Life

All living organisms share certain characteristics that distinguish them from non-living things. These characteristics include the ability to grow, reproduce, and respond to their environment. Living organisms also have a specific structure and function, and they are able to maintain a stable internal environment.

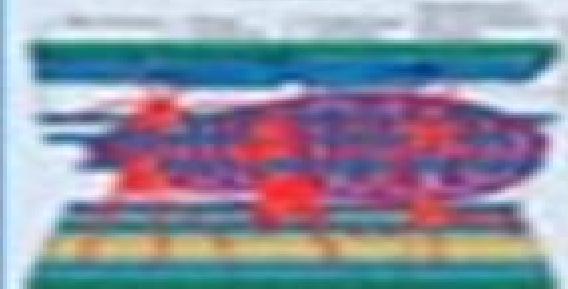

Cells: The Basic Unit of Life

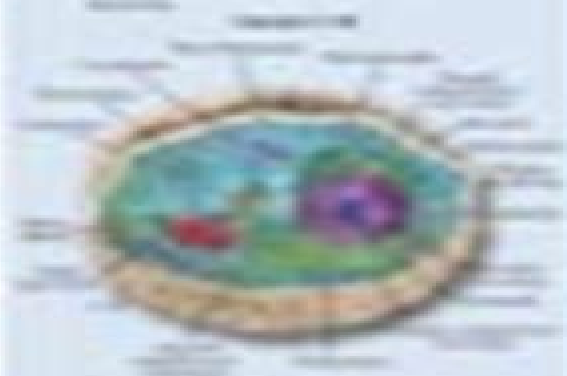

Cells are the basic units of life. They are the smallest units of an organism that can perform all the functions of life. Cells are found in all living organisms, from simple bacteria to complex multicellular organisms like humans.

Plant cells are specialized for photosynthesis. They have a large central vacuole that stores water and maintains the cell's shape. They also have a thick cell wall that provides structural support. The nucleus contains the genetic material that controls the cell's activities.

Animal cells are specialized for movement and energy production. They lack a large central vacuole and a thick cell wall. Instead, they have many small vacuoles and a large nucleus. Mitochondria are present in the cytoplasm, where they produce energy for the cell.
