Hamilton, 2013-11-11 In the development of many medical technologies the beginning is characterised by an emphasis on the basic scientific principles of the technology and the optimisation of the functional aspects of the technology As a technology matures there is a tendency for the underlying principles to be forgotten as the clinical applications begin to develop and the focus moves to an understanding of the clinical application This maturity brings with it new challenges for those involved in the use of the technology An acceptance of the methodology may lead to a scaling back of the basic training of staff into the fundamentals of the techniques and lead to a lack of questioning as to those issues which lead to the optimisation in clinical applications This lack of basic training may ultimately lead to a stifling of research and development of the technology as a whole as trained staff becomes a scarce commodity Nuclear medicine is no exception to this development cycle As a medical specialty the discipline has matured The basic imaging technology has become more reliable in everyday use requiring less input from scientific staff Clinical procedures have become protocols which are often followed without due understanding of the basic principles underlying the imaging procedure This is clearly demonstrated when new radiopharmaceuticals are
