

BASIC VOCAL TRAINING PART 2

Reasons Your Voice Cracks!

Voice cracks can happen no matter your age, gender, or whether you're a teenager in class, 50-something executive at work, or a professional singer on stage. All humans have voices — with rare exceptions — and so all humans can experience voice cracks.

Why, though? Here's a little background that may help.

The tone and volume of your voice results from a combination of:

- Air rushing from your lungs
- Vibrations of two parallel pieces of tissue called the vocal folds or vocal cords
- Muscular movements in and around your larynx, commonly called the voice box

When you speak or sing and change your pitch and volume, the laryngeal muscles open and close as well as tighten and loosen your vocal folds. When your voice goes high, the folds are pushed close together and tightened. When your voice goes low, they're pulled apart and loosened. Voice cracks happen when these muscles suddenly stretch, shorten, or tighten. Many causes can be responsible for a crack, so let's help you figure out which one describes your case, and what you may be able to do about it.
