inner place that is in actuality beyond words The only way to make this place appear in the range of our common understanding as the reality that is in each of us is for an artist to auscultate upon it from different angles and circumstances Again and again in what seems to be an acceptance of the limitations on our sense making and also an embrace of the actual capability of language the poet touches on the same sure place in each sonnet in a process that he refers to as the skipping of a stone again and again on the same water Living with Limits Harold C. Warlick, 1996 This is precisely the kind of book we need for this confused exasperating yet exhilarating time in the life of the church Instead of offering either despair or platitudes about the loss of traditional ambiguities and to respond to the challenge of the times with a lilting imagination and a skip in our step It ought to become a handbook for Christians in every denomination John Killinger Distinguished Professor of Religion and Culture Samford University Birmingham Alabama
