Recent Research Findings

GAIL S. MAKULOWICH

STD RATES INCREASING

Over 15 million new cases of STDs occurred in the United States in 1996, according to a panel of health experts convened by the American Social Health Association (ASHA), a private, nonprofit advocate of national STD prevention. This is a 25% increase over the 12 million estimated by the Centers For Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in 1988. More than two thirds of the STD cases were due to increased cases of human papilloma virus (HPV) and trichomoniasis.

The increase in STDs is also indicative of better detection methods, for example, of asymptomatic "silent" infections, according to the ASHA. These asymptomatic infections can be diagnosed only through testing, and routine screening programs are not yet widespread. "Social stigma and lack of public awareness concerning STDs often inhibit frank discussion between sexual partners and between patients and health care providers about STD risk and the need for testing. To make significant inroads in the quest to eliminate STDs, we as a nation must break the silence, dispel the ignorance, and destigmatize the topic," asserted Linda L. Alexander, Ph.D., ASHA President and CEO.

STD rates in the United States remain the highest of any country in the industrialized world. U.S. populations at greatest risk are teens (who are more likely to have multiple partners and otherwise engage in risky behaviors), women (due to physiologic and social disadvantages) and their infants, and ethnic minorities who are poor and lack access to medical care.

CULTURALLY RELEVANT BEHAVIORAL INTERVENTION DRAMATICALLY REDUCES STDs

A new study¹ has shown that black and Mexican-American women who attended 3- to 4-hour, culturally relevant group counseling sessions on STD prevention once a week for 3 weeks had markedly reduced rates of chlamydial and gonorrheal infection compared with similar women who received the standard one-time, 15-minute counseling session. The study was conducted by researchers at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio and the San Antonio Health Department. Women in the study were being tested for an STD such as gonorrhea, chlamydial infection, syphilis, or trichomoniasis. The researchers, led by Rochelle N. Shain, Ph.D., randomly assigned 313 women to the three-session counseling group and 304 women to standard counseling (control) group.

The intensive counseling group of women had a rate of chlamydial and gonorrheal infection that was 34% less than that of the control group at 6 months (11.3% versus 17.2%); 49% less between 6 and 12 months (9.1% versus 17.7%); and 38% less during the entire study (16.8% versus 26.9%). The women who received three counseling sessions also were less
