

progressive development of transportation and other facilities in the still rather remote north-western corner of North America.

In limited space it deals helpfully with a variety of subjects, such as transportation, settlement, industry, agriculture, trade, travel and recreation, national security, and international collaboration. In an appendix is found a sketch of the geography, resources, and economy of the North Pacific area. The book is equipped with four maps, illustrating area and population, major transportation routes, global air routes, and known resources. Mr. John Hughes, a Canadian authority on developments in the north country, writes an introduction. Mr. Kizer is himself Regional Chairman of the National Resources Planning Board, and Chairman of the Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission.

One or two minor points might, perhaps, be corrected when the book is reprinted. The organization established as a result of the Treaty of 1909 has never been known as the International Joint Commission on Control of Boundary Waters, nor is such a ponderous title justified even on the score of descriptive accuracy. One of the larger investigations carried out by the Commission, the Trail Smelter Case, had nothing whatever to do with boundary waters or any other waters. The Commission has not so far had occasion to deal with any problems involving the waters of the upper Columbia (unless the Grand Coulee dam is thought to be on the upper Columbia) or Clark Ford (Pend d'Oreille in Canada), but it has had before it applications relating to the Kootenai (Kootenay in Canada), the Okanogan (Okanagan in Canada), and the Skagit, nearer the Pacific coast. (Since this was written the Commission has been requested by the United States and Canadian governments to carry out a very extensive and important investigation involving the water-power and other resources of the Columbia River and its branches on both sides of the international boundary.) It is a little unfortunate that, when collaboration has become the rule in so many major problems, the Canadian and United States Boards on Geographic Names could not get together and agree upon common names or common spellings for these waterways along the international boundary.

The Air Future: A Primer of Aeropolitics. By BURNET HERSHEY. New York: Duell, Sloan and Pearce [Toronto: Wm. Collins and Sons]. 1943. Pp. vi, 258. ($3.50)

THIS is a study of some of the major international political problems of international civil air transport, written in non-technical language and in a popular style. Its great value is that it is based on an awareness of the fact that the problems of international air transport are in the main not commercial but political and strategic. "The most fundamental fact about aviation," Mr. Hershey says, "is its inseparably dual nature." "More like a Jekyll-and-Hyde than any other product of man's invention, airpower can change in a moment from the civilized messenger of good will to a fallen archangel of evil" (p. 44). Mr. Hershey also wisely emphasizes the profound effects which the future development of aviation will have on the civilization of the world, effects which can be beneficial or suicidal.
