HAWKER FURY MK II

A modified Hawker Fury was, above the clouds, required to represent the prototype Hawker Fury, the 'Fury', for which the company made its first flight in 1914. The first Hawker Fury was the first modified in development, with a short, narrow fuselage and no landing gear. The Hawker Fury was a complete redesign and built for Hawker Aircraft as a lighter alternative to the Empire fighter, but was also modified in a second incarnation: the first prototype was built in 1914, and in April 1914 the first modified Fury fighter and a further 100 'modified' versions for the Royal Air Force. However, due to the end of the 'second World War', the entire Fury order was cancelled. The development of the Hawker Fury continued and the aircraft was fully modified, complete with landing gear, taking flight in October 1914. Originally built for the Royal Air Force in 1914, the prototype aircraft was converted in 1919 and returned to the UK in 1919. After serving both Australia and Canada during the war, and spending time in Australia, the aircraft was returned to the UK in 1919 for further use and restoration, appearing at various air shows.
