Adjuvant Therapy Of Primary Breast Cancer:

Adjuvant Therapy of Primary Breast Cancer Hans-Jörg Senn, Aron Goldhirsch, Richard D. Gelber, Bruno Osterwalder, 2011-12-28 The ultimate consumer of the data presented at conferences on the primary treatment of operable breast cancer is the patient and when as in this disease the benefits of therapy are relatively modest the availability and interpretation of the data from trials becomes an issue of primary importance The effects of present treatment are in fact such that more patients relapse despite therapy than are estimated to benefit from it It is therefore extremely difficult for the physician to recommend unequivocally one particular adjuvant treatment modality for the vast population of women with breast cancer The interpretation of results from clinical research oriented programs is constantly applied however in the treatment of breast cancer patients outside of clinical trials From presented or published data many physicians extrapolate indications for the use of a given treatment regimen for their patients perceiving it as the best available therapy It is essential that the best available therapy be selected individually for each patient However considering the modest effect of treatment upon outcome it is imperative that those who provide the data those who are involved in both patient care and clinical research make it known that the best current treatment for the population of breast cancer patients is available within the framework of clinical trials In this way not only present day patients but also future ones will derive the greatest benefit

Adjuvant Therapy of Primary Breast Cancer VI Hans-Jörg Senn, Richard D. Gelber, Aron Goldhirsch, Beat Thürlimann, 2012-12-06 This RRCR conference volume marks number six in a 20 year evolution of international conferences on the adjuvant therapy of primary breast cancer Starting in 1978 a handful of some 80 enthusiastic breast cancer surgeons and oncologists met in a secluded mountain resort near St Gallen in Eastern Switzerland to exchange their early data of some pioneer trials on adjuvant systemic therapy of early breast cancer and to correlate their future research efforts to overcome the frustrating prognostic stagnation of this dominant neoplastic disease in Western females during the past decades Repeated every 3-4 years these St Gallen International Conferences on Adjuvant Therapy of Primary Breast Cancer have continuously grown in numbers of participants and in normative therapeutic influence by being published in major oncology journals 1-3 the last 6th conference having taken place from February 25-28 1998 with more than 1800 attendees from over 50 countries worldwide What is the fascination of adjuvant therapy in primary early breast cancer and what has changed during the last 3 years since March 1995 to justify another international gathering of this size and of the world's leading experts in the field There is no question that providing even more effective care and designing appropriate recommendations for the multitudes of patients with so called early breast cancer or at high risk of developing the disease remain highly important public health goals

Senn, Richard D. Gelber, Aron Goldhirsch, Beat Thürlimann, 2012-12-06 Advances in breast cancer research achieved through the progress of knowledge and development of new therapies have been translated into improved quality of care for breast cancer patients Clinical investigations and clinical trials have made the largest contribution to the body of knowledge that finds its way to the patient Never before during the past decades of management of breast cancer has there been such a fruitful intellectual cross fertilization of ideas among individuals involved in the generation of hypotheses basic research development of drugs and treatments conduct of clinical trials and statistical evaluation the results of all of which are now translated into progress in clinical care Even issues such as the quality of life of breast cancer patients once the domain for few are now being openly addressed by trials and discussed in a much broader forum The IVth International Conference on the Adjuvant Therapy of Primary Breast Cancer also known as the st Gallen Conference was again attended by more than 800 scientists and clinicians interested in this broad spectrum of breast cancer research and the interactions between such diverse fields of interest and specialties as cancer pathology molecular biology and psychosocial oncology This volume collects findings and conclusions presented at the conference Adjuvant therapy of primary breast cancer ,1992

Adjuvant Therapy of Breast Cancer I. Craig Henderson, 2012-12-06 The results of randomized trials evaluating the use of early or adjuvant systemic treatment for patients with resectable breast cancer provide an eloquent rebuttal to those who would argue that we have made no progress in the treatment of cancer Many of the tumors that we have been most successful in curing with chemotherapy and other newer forms of treatment are relatively uncommon In contrast breast cancer continues to be the single most common malignancy among women in the western world is increasingly a cause of death throughout Asia and Third World countries and remains one of the most substantial causes of cancer mortality world wide The use of mammography as a means of early detection has been shown to reduce breast cancer mortality by 25 35% among those populations in which it is utilized The use of adjuvant systemic treatment in appropriate patients provides a similar and additional reduction in breast cancer mortality Few subjects have been so systematically studied in the history of medicine and it seems fair to conclude that the value to adjuvant systemic therapy in prolonging the lives of women with breast cancer is more firmly supported by empirical evidence than even the more conventional or primary treatments using various combinations of surgery and radiotherapy Clinical and Immunological Aspects on Adjuvant Therapy in
