The Dower House Annabel

Davis-Goff, 1999-06-12. Widely praised for her rich and elegant prose, Annabel Davis Goff delivers the story of Molly Hassard, an Anglo-Irish orphan coming of age in a formerly privileged society. As the Protestant Irish emerge from the postwar years, they refuse to face the inevitable. They have beautiful old houses but can scarcely afford to heat them, eat meals on exquisitely set tables while the roof leaks, and talk very seriously about the importance of making suitable marriages. When Molly flees the genteel poverty of Ireland for London of the 1960s, she must balance the allure of the new against the romance of a world that no longer exists.

The Eldest Son

Archibald Marshall, 2012-01-01. Nina said the Squire I'm most infernally worried. He was sitting in his wife's morning room in a low chair by the fire. In front of him was a table set for tea for one himself. There were buttered toast and dry toast and preserves, a massive silver teapot, milk jug, cream jug, and sugar basin, a breakfast cup of China tea, and two boiled eggs, one of which he was attacking, sitting forward in his chair with his legs bent. He had come in from hunting a few minutes before, at about six o'clock, and it was his habit thus to consume viands which most men of his age and bulk might have been afraid of as likely to spoil their dinner. But he was an active man in spite of his fifty-nine years and his tendency to put on flesh, and it would have taken more than a tea that was almost a meal to reduce his appetite for dinner at eight, after a day in the saddle and a lunch of sandwiches and a flask of sherry. When his tea was over, he would indulge himself in half an hour's nap with the Times open at the leader page on his knee and go up to dress, feeling every inch of him a sportsman and an English country gentleman. His tea was generally brought to him in his library. This evening a footman had followed him into that room immediately upon his entering the house, as usual, had unbuckled his spurs, pulled off his boots for him, and put on in their place a pair of velvet slippers worked in silk which had been warming in front of the fire. Only when his coat was wet or much splashed with mud did the Squire change that. He considered smoking jackets rather effeminate and slippers on ordinary occasions sloppy. It was only in his dressing room or on these evenings after hunting that he wore them Otherwise if he had to change his boots during the daytime he put on another pair He was particular on little points like this All his rules were kept precisely by himself and those about him This evening he had told the footman and the butler who had followed him into the room with the tray that he would have his tea in Mrs Clinton s room and he had marched across the hall with a firm and decisive step in his red coat and buckskin breeches between which and his hand knitted heather mixture socks showed a white expanse of under drawers round a muscular calf Mrs Clinton sat opposite to him in another low chair at work on a woollen waistcoat He always wore waistcoats made by her thick for the winter light for the summer and she knitted his socks for him of which he required a large number for he hated them to be darned He liked to see her working for him like this He was a rich man but a woman ought to work with her hands for her husband whether he was rich or poor It was her wifely duty and incidentally it kept her out of mischief Mrs Clinton at the age of fifty four with her smooth yellow grey hair and her quiet and composed face did not look as if she would be up to serious mischief even if this and other restrictions were removed from her She looked up when her husband addressed her and marked the furrow between his heavy eyebrows Then she looked down again at her work and waited for him to unbosom himself further A Knight of the Nets Amelia Edith (Huddleston) Barr,1896 McClure's Magazine ,1893
