Please note This is a companion version not the original book Sample Book Insights 1 The core of good etiquette in business is to be kind respectful and considerate to others From how you interact in an office environment and the way you treat your colleagues to the way you present yourself etiquette is the protocol we follow to show respect to others 2 The first impression is not just made by what you wear and how you look but also by your voice over the phone emails and social media content It is important to note that what comes up when you are searched online matters 3 First impressions are made up of a few different components where one without the next renders the whole first impression You have seven seconds to make a first impression and different people say that within milliseconds the other person has already made an opinion about you 4 Your voice is a tool to demonstrate how confident assertive and powerful of a presence you have You would never see a major CEO of a huge firm speaking softly when addressing his or her team and you certainly wouldn't see a successful salesperson pitching a potential client with a high squeaky voice or a low one that trails off at the end of each sentence

EU Investor Protection Regulation and Liability for Investment Losses Marnix Wallinga, 2020-10-30 This book examines the relationship between the EU investor protection regulations enshrined in MiFID and MiFID II and national contract and torts law It describes how the effect of the conduct of business rules as implemented in national financial supervision legislation in private law extends to the issue of enforcement and critically assesses this interaction from the perspective of EU law In particular the conclusions identified in the book will deepen readers understanding of the interplay between the conduct of business rules and private law norms governing a firm's liability to pay damages such as duty of care attributability of damage causation contributory negligence and limitation In turn the book identifies the subordination and the complementarity model to conceptualise the interaction between the conduct of business rules and private law norms Moreover the book challenges the view that civil courts are or should be forced to give private law effects to violation of the MiFID and MiFID II conduct of business rules in line with the subordination model. Instead the complementarity model is advanced as the preferred approach to this interaction in view of what MiFID and MiFID II require from Member States in terms of their implementation as well as the desirability of each model. This model presupposes that courts should consider the conduct of business rules when adjudicating individual disputes while preserving the autonomy of private law norms governing liability of investment firms towards clients. Based on analysis of case law of courts in Germany, the Netherlands and England Wales as well as scholarly literature, the book also compares the available causes of action, the conditions of liability and the obstacles investors face when claiming damages as well as how and the extent to which investors can benefit from the conduct of business rules in clearing these obstacles. In so doing, under the approach adopted by national courts to the interplay between the conduct of business rules of EU origin and private law, the book shows how investors can benefit from the influence of these rules on private law norms. In closing, it demonstrates a hybridisation of private law remedies resulting from the accommodation of the conduct of business rules into the private law discourse according to the complementarity model, illustrating how judicial enforcement through private law means may contribute to investor protection.
