Acceptability Of Transport Pricing Strategies:

Acceptability of Transport Pricing Strategies Jens Schade, Bernhard Schlag, 2003-10-17 Several studies and research projects all over the world have considered transport pricing strategies as promising attempts to solve the urgent traffic problems in urban areas. However, empirical results have shown that public and political acceptability of such strategies is low. Until now, acceptance research in transport has occurred in comparative isolation. There are no standardized terms and no generally recognized research methodologies. This volume attempts to overcome this research problem and bring the disciplines involved together. The first aim is a contribution to an interdisciplinary exchange which covers all relevant aspects of acceptance. Contributions come from some of the most recognized psychologists, economists, civil engineers, sociologists, and political scientists in the field, including Bruno S. Frey, Tommy Göring, Peter Jones, Jos Viegas, Tony May, Stef Proost, and other authors. The second aim is to look deeper into the question of which determinants influence the amount of acceptability. A third aim deals with chances to overcome the lack of public and political acceptability to bring together the most advanced state of the art and to propose forthcoming and possible solutions for implementing different kinds of travel demand management measures, including pricing. The book is based upon papers presented at the MC ICAM conference on Acceptability of Transport Pricing Strategies held in Dresden, 23-24 May 2002. It is divided into four parts: Setting the Stage, Acceptability Problem, European Research Results, Behind Public Acceptability, Relevant Determinants, and Political Acceptability, and tackles several relevant parts from a theoretical as well as from a practical viewpoint by asking questions like how to explain the different levels of public acceptability of various travel demand management measures, Which factors influence the level of acceptability, How to deal with political acceptability problems, What should future implementation approaches look like from the point of view of acceptability. Acceptability of transport pricing strategies, 2002

Acceptability of Urban Transport Pricing Jens Schade, Bernhard Schlag, 2000. Tiivistelmä Pricing in Road Transport Erik Verhoef, Michiel C.J. Bliemer, Linda Steg, Bert van Wee, 2008-01-01. The book provides ample evidence of the various and often complex issues that arise in road pricing policies. New research is presented on topics mostly neglected in the past, such as the role of firms in road pricing or new insights from dynamic network models. Tilmann Rave, Journal of Regional Science. Transport pricing is high on the political agenda throughout the world, but as the authors illustrate, governments seeking to implement this often face challenging questions and significant barriers. The associated policy and research questions cannot always be addressed adequately from a mono-disciplinary perspective. This book shows how a multi-disciplinary approach may lead to new types of analysis and insights contributing to a better understanding of the intricacies of transport pricing and eventually to a potentially more effective and acceptable design of such policies. The study addresses important policy and research themes such as the possible motives for introducing road transport pricing and potential conflicts between these motives, behavioural responses to transport pricing for households and firms, the modelling of transport pricing and the acceptability of pricing Studying road transport pricing from a multi disciplinary perspective this book will be of great interest to transport policymakers and advisors transport academics and consultants and students in transport studies necessary reorganization but at the same time created additional environmental and transport problems This phenomenon is pervasive all around the globe but it particularly affects the European continent which is still fragmented by administrative cultural and linguistic differences national boundaries and rivalries In this context the slow but persistent drive towards market integration and deregulation makes Europe an extraordinary laboratory for politicians economic researchers and especially for transport analysts

Democratic Acceptance of Spatial Planning Policy Measures Lyn Ellen Pleger, 2018-06-15 This book examines the democratic acceptance of spatial planning measures using Switzerland as a case study The currently inefficient land use in industrialised countries calls for new spatial planning policies Yet governments have largely failed to implement innovative policy measures which may be due to a lack of democratic acceptance To date little is known about the democratic acceptance of spatial planning measures Switzerland offers a promising candidate because of its direct democratic system which allows citizens preferences for specific policy measures to be directly measured In this work the democratic acceptance of spatial planning instruments is investigated from various perspectives in the form of original empirical studies which are embedded in an innovative conceptual framework It demonstrates that not only spatial planning instruments in general but also incentive based instruments in particular generally enjoy high acceptance This finding is remarkable considering the fact that efficient land use instruments have only been marginally implemented Addressing the needs of both academics and land use practitioners in the private and public sector the book shows that in order to improve the democratic acceptance of spatial planning measures attention must be paid to their context content and the means by which that content is provided Freight Transport Modelling Moshe E. Ben-Akiva,Hilde Meersman,Eddy Van de Voorde,2013-05-14 This title addresses the need to develop new freight transport models and scientific tools to provide sound solutions that consider the wide range of internal and external impacts The international contributions push forward frontiers in freight transport modelling and analysis
