

INTRODUCCION

El interés en el desarrollo humano antes del nacimiento es muy amplio debido a la curiosidad acerca de nuestro comienzo y al deseo de mejorar la calidad de vida. Los complicados procesos los cuales un niño se desarrolla a partir de una única célula son milagrosos y pocos fenómenos, son más emocionantes que una madre que observa a su feto durante una ecografía, ser testigo de la adaptación de un recién nacido a su nuevo ambiente estimulante.

El desarrollo humano comienza con la fecundación cuando un gameto masculino o espermatozoide se une con un gameto femenino u ovocito (óvulo) para formar una única célula: de cigoto. Esta célula totipotencial de gran especialización constituye el inicio de cada uno de nosotros como individuos únicos. El cigoto visible a simple vista como una mata diminuta, contiene cromosomas y genes (unidades de información genética) que proceden de la madre y el padre, el cigoto unicelular se divide numerosas veces y se transforma progresivamente en un ser humano, multicelular mediante división, migración, crecimiento y diferenciación celulares. Periodos de desarrollo es habitual dividir el desarrollo humano en los periodos pre-embrionario y fetal.

En periodos pre embrionario comprende el desarrollo del ser humano durante la primera semana: se aprecia el desarrollo de cigoto que por mitosis pasa al estado de dos células, otra mitosis lo transformara en cuatro células, que tras varias mitosis pasaran a mórula y blastocitos.

Al desarrollo durante esta semana por las constantes mitosis se le denomina también segmentación, segunda semana: durante el octavo día de las células de la masa celular van a conformar el disco embrionario y laminas. Tercera semana: se da la formación de las capas germinativas, diferenciación tisular y orgánica inicial.

El periodo embrionario se extiende desde la tercera hasta la octava semana de desarrollo y es el paso en el cual cada una de las tres hojas germinativas, ectodermo, mesodermo, endodermo, dan origen a sus propios tejidos y sistemas orgánicos como consecuencias de la formación de órganos se establecen las principales caracteres del cuerpo. Por ultimo el periodo fetal, que abarca desde 9 semanas hasta el nacimiento, se caracteriza por el nacimiento y elaboración de estructuras. El sexo se puede distinguir claramente hacia las 12 semanas, los fetos son viables 22 semanas después de la fecundación pero sus posibilidades de sobrevivir no son buenas hasta que tienen varias semanas, meses de edad.
