I. BETWEEN JEWISH PHILOSOPHY AND KABBALAH IN MODERN SCHOLARSHIP

The main purpose of this study is to elucidate some aspects of the relations between some writings of a mystic, Abraham Abulafia, the founder of ecstatic Kabbalah, and the medieval figure he admired most, Maimonides, the founder of Jewish Aristotelianism. This issue is to be understood as part of a much broader topic, which is fundamental for the understanding of the Jewish speculative corpora in the Middle Ages: the relation between philosophy and mysticism. As seen below, this issue has been already aborded by several scholars, one of the most eminent among them being Prof. Alexander Altmann. Therefore, before dwelling upon the details of the particular question let me survey briefly the state of the field.

The relationship between philosophy and mysticism in Judaism has been discussed several times by many scholars and thinkers. Two of them, David Neumark¹ and Franz Rosenzweig² have proposed a theory, which may be designated as the « pendulum theory », whose basic assumption is the existence of oscillations between the dominance of the speculative and the mystical in Jewish thought. The emergence of the central trend in medieval Jewish mysticism, Kabbalah, is portrayed by them as a reaction to the ascent of Jewish philosophy in the form presented by Maimonides's Guide of the Perplexed. These authors assume that the fluctuation between speculation and mysticism is to be traced to ancient times, the medieval period being the most obvious and important episode of this ongoing oscillation. Motivated by a deep aversion toward Kabbalah, Heinrich Graetz, the most important 19th century Jewish historian, has already considered Kabbalah to be a pernicious medieval innovation, or invention, aiming to counteract the influence of the « enlightening » Aristotelianism of the « Great eagle »³. Last but not least, Gershom Scholem emphasized the importance of the encounter between

By tradition he was to bequeath the ring to his heir but he loved his three sons equally so he had two new rings made, crafted to be indistinguishable from the original, and on his deathbed gave a ring to each son. The narrator explains that the father is God and his sons are the Jews, the Christians, and the Muslims, each believing themselves to be the sole upholders of the true religion. A historical and literary study, the book offers a comprehensive discussion of the various guises of the Parable from the early Middle Ages onwards and highlights its capacity to reflect openness and pluralism in the interfaith encounter.
