Abstract. This paper summarizes empirical findings on the influence of information and communication technologies (ICTs) on organizational, professional, political, legal, and administrative accountability. ICTs both enforce and challenge these traditional accountability arrangements, and call for new forms of accountability. We conclude that the information age requires an new conceptualization of accountability which focuses on governance instead of government.

1. Introduction

Governments use information and communication technologies (ICTs) to improve service to citizens and enhance their input in policy processes. Furthermore, ICTs can play an important role in government accountability. ICTs can be used to support traditional forms of public accountability but may also facilitate new forms of accountability. In this paper we will explore the ways in which governments can be held accountable in the information age.

In the first part of this paper (sections 2 and 3) we will discuss the key concepts of this paper: ICTs and public accountability. ICTs have certain characteristics that tend to influence government practices but do not determine the outcomes. We will define accountability as institutionalized practices of account giving and present a typology of five types of accountability (organizational, professional, legal, administrative, and political).

The second part of this paper (sections 4 to 9) summarizes major empirical findings on the influence of ICTs on these types of accountability. We assume that governments in the information age are confronted with the same

Accountability In The Information Age:

, The Information Ecology of E-government V. J. J. M. Bekkers, Vincent Homburg, 2005 It seems that only a short time ago numerous academics and practitioners in the field were somewhat blinded by the successes of the dot com developments in the private sector and some of them enthusiastically claimed that public administration was to be revolutionized But that did not happen and also the dot com soap bubble burst This suggests that there is much yet to be learned about innovation in public administration especially about innovations at the cornerstones of technological and institutional transformations New and more fully developed formulations of theory into practice are needed The goal of the editors of this book is to contribute to some aspects of the understanding of e government In order to understand electronic government one has to scrutinize the various environments and contexts in which e government is developed and implemented As such it builds upon the biological and environmental lines of reasoning that have been suggested by authors like Bonnie Nardi and Vicky O Day and Thomas Davenport and Laurence Prusak

Public Administration in an Information Age I. Th. M. Snellen, Wim B. H. J. van de Donk, 1998 This book is a joint effort of researchers who have been involved in research projects and programmes that have been trying to chart and reflect upon the implications of Information and Communication Technologies ICTs for Public Administration Tilburg Rotterdam Kassel Irvine Nottingham Glasgow Since the fifties computers had largely facilitated and the transformation of the minimal Night Watch state into the modern Welfare state through their contribution to their effectivity productivity and efficiency In most Handbooks of Public Administration computers are seen as neutral instruments and most of the time the role of computer technologies in the transformation of public administration is completely neglected This deafening silence is a great contrast with the way ICT s are actually changing public administration The faster the developments in a field of study are the more difficult it is to let the theories related to that field of study mature In such circumstances most statements will remain provisional and context dependent 25 years of research in Irvine California and Kassel Germany and more than 10 years of research in Tilburg Rotterdam The Netherlands and about seven years of research in Glasgow Nottingham the United Kingdom nonetheless enables the presentation of a modest image of public administration as it is entering the information age Researchers in each of these groups have nevertheless not stopped trying to phrase theories about the implications of informatization for public administration with a more or less larger scope that are robust in different contexts and over longer periods of time These results and theories covering a broad set of elements of the body of knowledge of public administration are presented in this volume As the authors try to demonstrate in this book informatization developments in public administration do not only challenge the existing body of knowledge of the public administration discipline but they are also opening up new perspectives and paradigms for the study of public administration tool kit to empower citizen participation in the American political process Technological changes in the way we present and process information coupled with inherent features of the free press have changed the nature of the individual citizen s engagement with our elected public servants Accountability Citizenship explains how we can restore accountability in government by accepting our personal accountability for some simple tasks we must do as individual citizens living in the age of information The book is non partisan Readers are asked only to agree on the very basics that the government of the United States is supposed to represent the people of the United States The author makes a compelling case that changes in our information distribution technologies and business models discourage effective political participation by citizens In the early days of our republic information distribution was based on newspapers subscription based and geographically aligned with the representative structure of Congress Over the past forty years deregulation of television and radio along with the information technology revolution have disrupted this alignment But we can restore accountability through the three steps of accountability citizenship being appropriately positive appropriately informed and appropriately engaged Holding Accountability Accountable Kenneth A.
