Technology of Breadmaking Stanley P. Cauvain, Linda S. Young, 2013-11-09 Not another book on breadmaking A forgivable reaction given the length of time over which bread has been made and the number of texts which have been written about the subject To study breadmaking is to realize that like many other food processes it is constantly changing as processing methodologies become increasingly more sophisticated yet at the same time we realize that we are dealing with a food stuff the forms of which are very traditional We can for example look at ancient illustrations of breads in manuscripts and paintings and recognize products which we still make today This contrast of ancient and modern embodied in a single processed foodstuff is part of what makes bread such a unique subject for study We cannot for example say the same for a can of baked beans Another aspect of the uniqueness of breadmaking lies in the requirement for a thorough understanding of the link between raw materials and processing methods in order to make an edible product This is mainly true because of the special properties of wheat proteins aspects of which are explored in most of the chapters of this book Wheat is a product of the natural environment and while breeding and farming practices can modify aspects of wheat quality we millers and bakers still have to respond to the strong influences of the environment

Cereals in Breadmaking Eliasson, 1993-02-23 This reference text describes the breadmaking process at the molecular level based on surface and colloidal science and introducing colloidal science with a minimum of theory Reviewing the current molecular and colloidal knowledge of the chain from wheat grain to bread the book discusses the structure of the dough how a foam is formed during fermentation and how starch gelatinization induces the formation of an open pore network such as the bread crumb covers new results on the gluten structure in bulk and at interfaces as well as on phase separation in the dough presents a complete model of all structural transitions from dough mixing to the formation of a bread details the physicochemical properties of proteins lipids and carbohydrates in wheat and other cereals and considers their modes of interaction and explores recent progress in the shape of biomolecular assemblies derived from forces and curvature at interfaces The text provides nearly 850 citations from the reference literature

Technology of Breadmaking Stanley Cauvain,2015-02-17 This practical comprehensive guide illuminates all aspects of breadmaking to give bakers scientists technologists and students a thorough understanding of the many new developments shaping the industry This book bridges the gap between scientific and practical accounts by providing technical coverage of the complex processes that link together to make bread and fermented products Chapters cover the nature of bread products the role of the ingredients in determining their quality processing methods and their control and equipment functions Emphasis is on exploring the contributions of individual components and processing stages to final bread quality reviewing the current state of technical knowledge on breadmaking This third edition reviews the new knowledge which has become available in the last 10 years and considers how the global trends of increased availability and wider range of fermented products around the world impact on current and future technological challenges for bakers Stanley P Cauvain is the Director and Vice President of Research and Development activities at BakeTran and Professor at the International Institute of Agri Food Security Curtin University Perth Western Australia
