

Economic Reforms and Agricultural Growth in India

SHANTANU DE ROY

It was argued that economic liberalisation would ensure a favourable shift in the terms of trade for agriculture in India, enabling producers to plough back surplus from cultivation to make long-term improvements on land, and raise agricultural productivity and growth rate. Contrary to expectations, there was no noticeable improvement in the terms of trade for agriculture during the reform period. Moreover, decline in capital formation in agriculture, inadequate expenditure on irrigation and extension services in rural areas, and a dearth of cheap institutional credit, resulted in a slowdown of agricultural growth and heightened livelihood insecurity for a substantial proportion of those dependent on agriculture.

It was argued that the initiation of reforms, liberalisation of external trade and corresponding price incentives would lead to enhanced investment, availability of crucial inputs, and increased output in agriculture. Moreover, it was expected that a shift in the terms of trade in favour of agriculture will improve agricultural exports and increase growth rate (Ahluwalia 1994). Favourable terms of trade were expected to have a positive impact in terms of raising agricultural production and private investment in India (Mishra 1998: 2105–09). These expectations notwithstanding, policy measures adopted following the initiation of economic reforms, did not lead to increased rate of agricultural growth.

Economic liberalisation entails a set of measures that are inimical to petty production in general, and agriculture in particular. In that sense, these policies have a distinct class bias against petty producers and the poor. These policy pursuits resulted in a reduction of public investment in rural infrastructure, including irrigation, agricultural research and extension services and a decline in the supply of rural credit to small and poor cultivators, and the pursuit of agricultural trade liberalisation. In this paper, I have analysed how each of these policies have affected the agriculture sector in India.

Growth Rate of Agriculture

High growth of the agricultural sector is crucial for overall development of economy. In India, its importance is heightened with a substantial section of the population dependent on agriculture for employment. As per the National Sample Survey Office (2000), about 59% of male workers and 75% of women workers were dependent on agriculture in 2011–12 (DSSO 2004: 14). High agricultural growth is important to reduce rural poverty. It was argued that doubling of the rate of agricultural growth from 2% to 4% along with 5% rate of growth of the economy will reduce income disparities between the agricultural and non-agricultural sectors (Planning Commission 2006). In this context, it will be worthwhile to analyse growth rates of the agricultural sector, and evaluate its performance in the context of the overall economy, after the initiation of the reforms in 1991–92.

Table 1 (p 66) shows that the growth rate of gross domestic product (GDP) of agriculture has declined since the initiation of economic reforms in India. However, during this period, growth rates of GDP have been increasing except for the two years between 2010–11 and 2013–14. The table shows an increasing divergence between growth rates of GDP of agriculture and economy between 1990–91 and 2009–10, thereby indicating the declining importance of agriculture in the growth trajectory of India.
