Eble,1983-10-17 The Aims of Higher Education Harry Brighouse,Michael McPherson,2015-05-04 This book features a group of top notch philosophers tackling some of the biggest questions in higher education What role should the liberal arts have in a college education Should colleges orient themselves to the educational demands of the business sector What is the role of highly selective colleges in the public sphere To what extent should they be subsidized directly or indirectly by the public Should they simply teach students skills and academic knowledge or should they play a role in shaping character and if so to what end Should highly selective colleges admissions practices give an edge to racial minorities or legacies or poor students How much should the public purse subsidize disadvantaged students attending such institutions These questions are fundamentally about moral and political valuesquestions of distributive justice and of what constitutes valuable education Philosophers are trained to identify value considerations in great detailindeed often with more precision than is ever needed for practical purposes but most disagreements about policy and practice proceed with minimal attention to the values assumed on either side and all sides can benefit from more clarity about exactly what moral values are at play The philosophers here then address some of the fundamental questions underlying debates about higher educationand in ways that are interesting and accessible to others Higher Education ,1948 The Education of Native and Minority Groups Ambrose Caliver,Annie Reynolds,Cline Morgan Koon,David Segel,James Frederick Abel,Katherine Margaret (O'Brien) Cook,Lloyd E.
