UV aging behavior evolution characterization of HALS-modified asphalt based on micro-morphological features

<https://doi.org/10.1515/rams-2023-0009>

received March 28, 2023; accepted July 26, 2023

Abstract: To clarify the effect of Hindered amine light stabilizer (HALS) on ultraviolet (UV) aging behavior of asphalt binder, the evolution history and characteristics of the UV induced micro-structure of modified asphalt were characterized. Scanning Electron Microscope (SEM) and Atomic Force Microscope (AFM) were used to analyze the micro-morphology evolution of light stabilizer-modified asphalt during UV aging. By defining the micro-structure of asphalt in aging joints induced by UV, the identification and classification of typical micro-structure are proposed. On this basis, an evaluation method based on the morphology evolution process of modified asphalt aging was proposed to quantitatively analyze the effect of HALS on the UV aging of asphalt binder. The results show that the control effect of HALS on the UV aging behavior of asphalt can be verified by SEM and AFM detection methods. At the same time, the aging interval of the asphalt modified by hindered amine was divided by the method, and it was verified that the HALS could significantly prolong the service life of the asphalt binder. The micro-morphology of asphalt binder undergoes the process of crack generation and propagation during UV aging. The micro-morphological changes of UV aged asphalt were interfered effectively by HALS, which could alleviate and control the development of UV induced micro-cracks, and promote the fusion of micro-cracks. This study provides an effective evaluation method for detecting UV aging micro-morphological evolution of HALS.

1 Introduction

Asphalt, as a high-viscosity organic material composed of hydrocarbons and their non-metallic derivatives, has been widely used as a pavement material in the field of road engineering [1]. However, when exposed to the elements such as light, heat, and water, the performance of asphalt pavement materials decreases. Especially under intense ultraviolet (UV) radiation, the chemical structure of asphalt pavement is damaged, which induces chemical reactions such as molecular alienation and dehydrogenation, accelerates the aging and cracking of asphalt pavement, seriously degrades the comprehensive performance of asphalt pavement, and makes the durability of asphalt pavement difficult to meet the design requirements [2, 3]. Therefore, controlling the road defects caused by UV aging of asphalt is the key to prolonging the service life of asphalt pavement.

At present, improving the anti-UV aging ability of asphalt is the main way to control the UV aging behavior of asphalt, which is achieved by adding various anti-aging agents [4]. The existing anti-UV additives include UV absorbent, antioxidant, composite-modified asphalt, or light stabilizers, among which Hindered amine light stabilizer (HALS) shows excellent anti-UV aging ability, can realize the extension of service life, and improve the use efficiency of asphalt roads [5–7].

Scholars at home and abroad have studied the anti-UV aging effect of HALS-modified asphalt. The results show
