Agricultural Trade And Food Security:

Agricultural Trade and Food Security Kevin Watkins, 1995 How does a 16 000 subsidy per farmer in the USA translate into food insecurity for households in Cagayan Valley in the Philippines How does a few percentage points rise in grain demand in South Korea drive up meat prices in the wet market of Valencia in Cotabato in the Philippines This book takes us through the interaction of international trade realities and national policies and how they impact on the survival strategies of even remote households and villages Knowing and understanding such links raise larger and pressing considerations for development work in many communities The need for a wider range of tools of analysis and intervention especially in the field of economics and in macroeconomic policy making is upon us This book will attempt to contribute to filling that need and hopefully contribute also to efforts at bringing micro development concerns into macro development programmes and policies
