How to prevent HIV

AIDS is a disease caused by HIV. HIV is a virus that attacks the immune system. It can be passed from one person to another through blood, semen, or vaginal fluids. There is no cure for HIV, but it can be managed with medication. People with HIV should take their medication every day to keep their immune system strong. They should also use condoms every time they have sex to prevent the virus from spreading. It is important to get tested for HIV regularly, especially if you are having sex with someone who has HIV. If you are pregnant and have HIV, you should take medication to prevent the virus from passing to your baby. If you are a healthcare worker, you should wear gloves and use proper disposal techniques to prevent the virus from spreading. If you are a blood donor, you should be screened for HIV before your blood is used. If you are a person with HIV, you should tell your partner about your status and encourage them to get tested. If you are a person with HIV, you should also tell your doctor about your status so they can monitor your health and provide you with the best care possible.
