Airborne Release Fractions American Society of Mechanical Engineers, 2002 The purpose of this project is to assess the technical basis and the numerical values for the Airborne Release Fractions ARFs These ARFs are used in both facility categorizaion and detailed accident analysis to estimate accident dose consequences for U S Department of Energy DOE nuclear facilities The DOE standard DOE 1997 on hazard categorizaion and accident analysis techniques known as DOE STD 1027 does not address several forms of material encountered by the Office of Environmental Management EM at the various DOE sites In early 1996 DOE attempted to establish and standardize ARF values across the EM complex by developing the EM Facility Hazard Categorization Standard DOE 1996a DOE 1996b known as SAFT 0029 which included specific ARF values However SAFT 0029 was never finalized The ARF numerical values included in SAFT 0029 are recognized and used by some DOE sites but other DOE sites have been chosen to use only DOE STD 1027 ARF values or to develop and use their own values based on their analyses and specific situations The significance of ARF is derived from its contribution to the source term which in turn is a key parameter for estimating the scope of the potential release spectrum from a facility or an activity and potential downwind consequences Yucca Mountain Crtd Asme, 2004 Yucca Mountain Nevada is designated as the proposed geological repository for disposal of spent nuclear fuel SNF and high level radioactive waste HLW The U S Department of Energy DOE is preparing a license application to be submitted to the U S Regulatory Committee USNRC The Waste Package Closure System WPCS project as summarized in this report addresses control related subsystems needed to perform waste package closure related operations It includes technical requirements for the WPCS including component design descriptions for the Welding and Inspection System and Control and Data Management System It also includes control functions and associated performance requirements for the Welding Process Advanced Mixed Waste Treatment Project, 1999 Elevation of the Environmental Protection Agency to Department Level Status United States. recommended timing and estimated costs of such research The committee concludes that EPA should devote more resources to investigating the relationships between fixed site outdoor monitoring data and actual human breathing zone exposures to ambient particulate matter and to identifying the most biologically important constituents and characteristics of particulate matter through toxicological studies The recommended research activities are critical to determining actual exposures of human subpopulations most susceptible to harm from the most hazardous constituents of particulate matter Future research will be an investment in public health and a means to ensure that resources spent on control technology and regulatory compliance will have a reasonable probability of success
