Paul Guyer,2018-07-18 Introductory technical guidance for professional engineers and aircraft maintenance managers interested in design criteria for aircraft corrosion control and paint facilities Technical Manual Naval Air Systems Command,2018-10-19 INTRODUCTION Cleaning is the first step in preventing aircraft corrosion and wear Dirt salt air deposits and other contaminants can promote rapid corrosion and wear of aircraft surfaces and can have an adverse impact on aircraft systems performance Effective cleaning requires knowledge of the appropriate materials and methods needed to remove these contaminants Section I contains general cleaning information and Section II contains additional procedures for aircraft exposed to volcanic ash or sand desert environments Corrosion Control for Aircraft ,1991 Workshop for Requirements for Aircraft Corrosion Control ,1984 Aircraft Corrosion Control [Videorecording] ,1980 Aviation Unit and Intermediate Maintenance ,1989 Proceedings of the Workshop on Requirements for Aircraft Corrosion Control Held in London on 10-15 April 1983 W. M. Imrie,ADVISORY GROUP FOR AEROSPACE RESEARCH AND

DEVELOPMENT NEUILLY-SUR-SEINE (France),1984 At this workshop relatively short presentations were made by specialists in the areas of procurement and design specifications manufacturing and maintenance practice costs and future efforts each series of papers was followed by a discussion period There were differing opinions on the continued use of magnesium alloy castings by the UK However the relatively complex protection procedures for successfully combating corrosion and damage were described by the British in some detail On the question of the prohibition of chromates and cadmium the general consensus was that no overall satisfactory alternatives have been forthcoming Several speakers referred to the difficulty of getting good feedback on corrosion problems Efforts to combat this difficulty appear to have been achieved with some success in the US Navy by the introduction of a system whereby trained maintenance personnel at three levels are required to report back to a data collection system The cost of corrosion prevention and maintenance proved a difficult subject for discussion No clear answer was available as to the extent procurement personnel would be prepared to pay for extra protection
