

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects on the subjects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

the "Cognitive" approach to the study of language. There are several reasons why this approach is so popular. First, it is based on a very simple idea: that language is a system of symbols that can be studied in the same way as any other system of symbols. Second, it is based on a very simple method: the study of the relationship between the form and the meaning of words. Third, it is based on a very simple theory: that the meaning of a word is determined by its context. Finally, it is based on a very simple conclusion: that the study of language is the study of the relationship between the form and the meaning of words.
