room. We were looking at some interiors in a book, recently, and it struck us how fixed they were. The pictures and rooms were beautiful, but when you dug on them and imagined how they might feel in reality, you got a sense that they were claustrophobic and that you were very little of yourself you could bring to every tiny thing had already been taken care of. Actually leaving space for your own life. Serendipitous moments that happen minute by minute, hour by hour and day by day is crucial to try and build into our lives. We're too technology to such an extent that we're from our pillows. The boundaries of private have all but disappeared. Technology is invading our lives. I've stopped and laptop into my bedroom. Technology is both literally and metaphorically invading our lives. Development is
