

THE FEMINIST

TODAY IN AI FINTECH

CARVING OUT SUCCESS AS AN INVENTOR: BECOMING THE WALL STREET MAVERICK

In late 2008, at 18 years old and right after my service in the U.S. Marine Corps, I stepped onto Wall Street amidst the economic downturn known as the 2008 Recession, as a part-time teller at Bank of America. Never did I foresee that my path would lead me to the innovative world of Artificial Intelligence Financial Technology (AI FinTech). National Bureau of Economic Research's study "Who Becomes an Inventor in America," suggests that someone with my background isn't typically destined for the annals of American invention. A self-taught inventor in advanced financial technologies is even more of a rarity for someone like me — a minority woman, raised in a working-class family riddled with challenges, dysfunction and chaos and a history of traumatic experiences in the Marine Corps. Despite possessing the IQ, personality type, and temperament that could mark me as a likely Fintech inventor, odds weighed heavily against me due to my background and circumstances. Various studies indicate my trajectory headed more towards self-destruction than invention. Yet, here I am, defying these very odds and assumptions; a living testament to resilience and undying human spirit.
