

BLUE ANGELS AND WHALES

One of the greatest divers in Britain (although I do not mean for the first time, he looked over the edge of a rocky reef a third sea before and saw the mystery of underwater life existing among the rocks. From that moment he knew that there was something of the most secret knowledge he had other divers and ready to die, and he set himself the problem of how to get in closer contact with them. This book is an account of how he did so, and how, by leaving a diving helmet, he opened their submarine world and met the fish, in his words, on their own level, swimming amongst them on the sea floor and making drawings of them and their surroundings from below sea level.

He is probably the first man to have made under-press drawings under water, but the interest of his book lies not only in the numerous pictures which he has made of this unknown world but in the personal observations of submarine life which he has recorded.
