

DEATH'S HEAD (MINION)

HISTORY: In 2016 A.D. on Earth-8410, Advanced Idea Mechanics' Precognitive Data Collection unit predicted an unknown threat would obliterate the agency in the near future. A.I.M. funded Dr. Evelyn Necker's Minion Project to create a perfect warrior cyborg to fight this threat. After working the bugs out on a prototype (Death Wreck), she finished her Minion cyborg in 2020 A.D. To obtain the best experience, he was sent out through time and space to kill 106 of the deadliest individuals in the multiverse and assimilate their instincts. However, as the cyborg absorbed more and more victims, he began to display personality characteristics not programmed into him, worrying Necker. While slaying target 103, Tyler Wilson, Minion encountered a future target, the bounty hunter "Freelance Peacekeeping Agent" Death's Head, who had been seeking to claim the price on Tyler's head. Angered at being beaten to his prey, Death's Head pursued Minion. Next Minion eliminated the barbarian Lehdrox K'Vant and freed the precog Phaedra, who called him "Death's Head" as she departed. Moments after he returned to 2020, Minion was attacked by Death's Head; however the peacekeeping agent was outmatched and swiftly assimilated. Since Death's Head was mechanical rather than organic, Minion absorbed his victim's entire mind, not just the instincts. Ignoring Necker's orders to wait for system checks, Minion teleported after the final target, Reed Richards of Earth-616. Necker followed, warning Richards in time for him to evade Minion's initial assault. Minion pursued Richards to Four Freedoms Plaza, where Richards used a neuron scrambler to allow the Death's Head personality to come to the fore. Seeing a programming loophole, the cyborg absorbed the data in Richards' computer, completing his mission without harming Richards, then departed, free of A.I.M. control. Meanwhile, back in 2020, the previous Death's Head body was bonded magically to necromancer Baron Strucker the Fifth, ironically creating the very threat A.I.M. had foreseen, Chamel.

Death's Head time-jumped to the planet Lionheart, 3442 A.D., a world where artificial sentients were forbidden, where he spent twelve months under the alias Hood leading an outlaw band of cyborgs and robots, the Merry Men. Shortly after the replicated organic Tuck joined the outlaws, the Merry Men were slain by the mutant Major Oak; Necker, who had caught up with Death's Head, stunned Oak before he could kill Death's Head. They returned to 2020 to find A.I.M. decimated by Chamel, who had now fled back in time to destroy A.I.M. at an earlier point, intending to wipe out this timeline altogether. Pursuing him to the modern day Earth-616, Death's Head, Tuck and Necker allied themselves with another group of time-travelers, the Avengers from the devastated future timeline Chamel was destined to create. Chamel arrived seconds later, slaying most of the Avengers before Death's Head used two time devices to send Chamel simultaneously into both future and past, ripping him apart. Deciding to stay in the present day, Tuck and Death's Head stole a truck and headed into Manhattan.

Before long, they encountered the Avengers, Fantastic Four, Hulk, Vorin of the Shadow Riders, Rick Jones, and Black Ace. Death's Head was summoned to the alternate future of Earth-9939 — in which Chamel had conquered Earth — to meet his "brothers", Death Wreck and Death Metal. Unfortunately, Death Metal, designed by

Deaths Head Meteor Neil R. Jones, 2011-06-01 Meteors may contain strange and valuable elements It is the exploration for such things that our author has used as a basis for his aviation story of outer space Excerpt High up on the top floor of a hundred story building sat a man at a desk Before him was an array of dials a system of switches and intricate electrical appliances Several hundred glass bulbs of various sizes flashed on and off intermittently in the wall over his desk Fitting over the top of his head and around his ears was a shining silver cap with a wire leading from the top to the apparatus before him He was one of the world s interplanetary radio operators of the twenty sixth century sending and receiving daily messages between Mars and the Earth One of the largest glass bulbs suddenly shot into brilliance and with a fierce crackling an electric spark closed the gap between two metal cylinders which paralleled one another about a foot apart At the same time the operator leaned forward and with practiced hand quickly manipulated several of the dials to various points after which he threw one of the switches into place A low droning sound filled the room and a large cylinder upon which was rolled a continuous sheet of thin aluminum began to slowly revolve As the brilliant blue white flare in the glass bulb died away the droning noise turned to a high keyed whine which broke off abruptly The cylinder stopped while the multitude of tiny glass bulbs again glowed separately at intervals as they had been doing just before the message had come in The operator shoved a lever at his side and a small roller cut across the large cylinder releasing a sheet of the thin aluminum which fell on to the desk before him Cut through its thin metal texture was the message from Mars in the three universal languages of the Earth The radio operator now turned his attention to a smooth plate which rested in the shape of a semi circle about two feet long and half as wide On the flat side of the thick composition plate a black screen arose several feet in a vertical plane at a right angle to the plate so that the screen faced the operator Placing the aluminum sheet upon the plate the operator threw another switch simultaneously pressing a button marked Meteorological Bureau The screen suddenly glowed throwing an series of orange hued rays on a slant down upon the plate bearing the narrow sheet of aluminum which grew indistinct finally fading until it disappeared from sight The radio man threw back the switch once more and the screen grew black again The plate was now as empty and bare as before he had laid the message upon its surface In the Meteorological Bureau two thousand miles away the officials read the message from the aluminum sheet which had been transmitted by radio One of them an elderly man walked over to the end of the room the wall of which was bordered into a squared shape by panels The color of the wall inside the dark paneling was a dull gray He advanced to a round metal inlaid section of the floor As soon as his feet came in contact with the metal a picture suddenly flashed upon the surface of the wall and the sounds of exclamations and loud laughter broke in upon his ears The elderly scientist was looking into a comfortable room fitted up with lounges and easy chairs Four young men were the sole occupants being engaged in a game at one of the tables in the room The game ceased as the four came to sudden attention facing their superior who now spoke Jan Trenton Here sir
