Debby Gold, Nypd Lee Thuna,2003-02 I examine the closets of our minds We set in these closets looking through things we have stored away Now we are picking out each piece to evaluate it We must decide whether it is something we want to keep in our daily lives Do we put it back on the shelf for daily use as part of our every day We must learn to release the past with its remembered pains disappointments joys successes present and past relationships The past is over We must learn to move on I write about our not looking over our shoulders in fear at the end of the day We do not look at life thru the eyes of others or seek permission from others how we should live our lives I feel we do too much of this We worry about what other people think of us and try to fulfil their views of ourselves It is why so many people are depressed We are our own success story we get new chance every day we get up Life is a little like eating we only get the food if we open up our mouths to receive it We open our mind to receive what is before us The best is yet to come It is all a matter of faith and who we believe in Who do you believe in Who is the master of your ship We follow who we believe in Turncoats Harris I.
