McClure, 1990 Evaluation which is a critical component of the planning process assesses the effectiveness and efficiency of library programs and services in the context of stated goals and objectives This book views evaluation as a type of research study in which evaluators collect either research or management data Chapters discuss steps of the evaluation process and provide practical examples of the application of these steps to specific library problems The overall objectives of the volume are to introduce readers to the relationship between planning and evaluation to discuss the components of an evaluation study in clear prose so that readers can easily understand the different steps to foster an attitude that recognizes the importance of evaluation for the development of library programs and services to offer examples of each component of the evaluation process to identify writings on evaluation in libraries and information centers and to encourage organizational change and underscore the importance of evaluation to library decision making Library of Congress Subject Headings Library of Congress, 1991 How Public Libraries Build Sustainable Communities in the 21st Century Kaurri C. Williams-Cockfield, Bharat Mehra, 2023-09-08 Public libraries through their mission vision and position in the community play a significant part in building community sustainability and are already positioned to serve as a backbone support organization for collective impact initiatives Determining the Data Needs for Decision Making in Public Libraries , 2004 Library decision makers evaluate community needs and library capabilities in order to select the appropriate services offered by their particular institution Evaluations of the programs and services may indicate that some are ineffective or inefficient or that formerly popular services are no longer needed The internal and external conditions used for decision making change Monitoring these conditions and evaluations allows the library to make new decisions that maintain its relevance to the community Administrators must have ready access to appropriate data that will give them the information they need for library decision making Today s computer based libraries accumulate electronic data in their integrated library systems ILS and other operational databases however these systems do not provide tools for examining the data to reveal trends and patterns nor do they have any means of integrating important information from other programs and files where the data are stored in incompatible formats These restrictions are overcome by use of a data warehouse and a set of analytical software tools forming a decision support system The data warehouse must be tailored to specific needs and users to succeed Libraries that wish to pursue support can begin by performing a needs analysis to determine the most important use of the proposed warehouse and to identify the data elements needed to support this use The purpose of this study is to complete the needs analysis phase for a data warehouse for a certain public library that is interested in using its electronic data for data mining and other analytical processes This study is applied research Data on users needs were collected through two rounds of face to face interviews Participants were selected purposively The phase two interviews were structured and presented selected data elements from the ILS to interviewees who were asked to evaluate how they would use each element in decision making
