A distributed multi-vehicle pursuit scheme: generative multi-adversarial reinforcement learning Xinhang Li, Yiyang Yang, Qinwen Wang, Zheng Yuan, Chen Xu, Lei Li, Lin Zhang, 2023-09-13 Multi vehicle pursuit MVP is one of the most challenging problems for intelligent traffic management systems due to multi source heterogeneous data and its mission nature While many reinforcement learning RL algorithms have shown promising abilities for MVP in structured grid pattern roads their lack of dynamic and effective traffic awareness limits pursuing efficiency The sparse reward of pursuing tasks still hinders the optimization of these RL algorithms Therefore this paper proposes a distributed generative multi adversarial RL for MVP DGMARL MVP in urban traffic scenes In DGMARL MVP a generative multi adversarial network is designed to improve the Bellman equation by generating the potential dense reward thereby properly guiding strategy optimization of distributed multi agent RL Moreover a graph neural network based intersecting cognition is proposed to extract integrated features of traffic situations and relationships among agents from multi source heterogeneous data These integrated and comprehensive traffic features are used to assist RL decision making and improve pursuing efficiency Extensive experimental results show that the DGMARL MVP can reduce the pursuit time by 54.7% compared with proximal policy optimization and improve the pursuing average success rate up to 85.67% Codes are open sourced in Github

Sovereign Mars Jacob Haqq-Misra, 2022-11-09 The goal of sending humans to Mars is becoming increasingly technologically feasible but the prospect of space colonization raises important questions about civilizational ethics and collective morality History shows how destructive colonialism has been resulting in centuries long struggles to achieve liberation from the violent competition for land and resources by colonial powers Space settlement poses the same temptation on a cosmic scale with commercial actors and government space agencies doing the work previously carried out by European empires The question is whether humans will take a different approach in this new frontier In Sovereign Mars astrobiologist Jacob Haqq Misra argues that settling Mars offers humankind a transformative opportunity to avoid the mistakes of the past by liberating Mars as a sovereign planet from the start Rather than see space as a way to escape human problems on Earth Mars presents humanity with a challenge to address these problems by thinking carefully about the theory and practice of civilization Drawing on past examples of cooperative sovereignty such as the Outer Space Treaty of 1967 the United Nations Law of the Sea Conventions and the Antarctic Treaty System Haqq Misra begins a conversation about governance in space well in advance of the first arrival of humans on Mars and makes the case for an analogous approach to space that will preserve the space environment and benefit future generations Haqq Misra examines the emergence of sovereignty in space through the lens of historical precedent on Earth and develops models of shared governance that could maximize the transformative potential of Mars settlement Sovereign Mars proposes the planet would serve humankind best as an independent planetary state a juridical peer to Earth to enable new experiments in human civilization and develop a pragmatic model for shared governance on Mars
