essence and cultural flow Jataka Tales: Volume 1 Eric Van Horn,2018-05-11 The Jataka Tales are the Buddhist equivalent of Aesop s Fables They are morality stories In the Buddhist cultures of that time these were the stories that children grew up hearing They were the popular entertainment Families would gather together in the evening after the day s work was done and share these tales And it is from these stories that people learned about the standards of conduct for followers of the Buddha Like Aesop s Fables the main characters in these stories can be a king a merchant a craftsperson or an animal In this collection which contains the first 50 of the 547 total stories we learn about a foolish merchant in Jataka 1 We read about a wise monkey who outwits an ogre to save his followers in Jataka 20 In Jataka 19 we learn about the Buddhist reverence for animal life Jataka 24 tells the story of a brave war horse who saves the kingdom and the touching relationship between the war horse and his cavalryman And Jataka 27 tells of the friendship between an elephant and a dog their separation and finally the happy ending and their joyous reunion Not all of the stories are happy ones There are a number of stories about Devadatta the monk who tried to kill the Buddha There are also stories about foolish people including a dim witted son who accidentally killed his father and a parallel story about an equally dim witted daughter who killed her mother In all these stories represent the whole of the human experience What we see is that in 2500 years the spectrum of humanity has not changed at all Jātaka Tales Eric K Van Horn,2020-01-04 The J taka Tales are the Buddhist equivalent of Aesop s Fables They are morality stories In the Buddhist cultures of that time these were the stories that children grew up hearing They were the popular entertainment of their time Families would gather together in the evening after the day s work was done and share these tales And it is from these stories that people learned about the standards of conduct for followers of the Buddha Like Aesop s Fables the main characters in these stories can be a king a merchant a craftsperson or an animal This collection contains stories 151 200 of the 547 total stories There are a number of stories about friendship J taka 157 tells the story of a jackal and a lion whose families stay friends for generations J taka 162 tells the story of both good and bad friendship with the good friendship coming between a black deer a leopard a lion and a tiger J taka 190 tells a story of both friendship and deep faith J takas 173 176 have mischievous monkeys at the heart of the story but in J taka 177 a monkey is finally the hero A monkey named Senaka saves his entire tribe by quick thinking In other J takas we have tree fairies elephants and even people In one story a man is rumored to have become a monk This inspires him to actually become a monk In all these stories represent the breadth the human experience What we see is that in 2500 years the spectrum of experiences has not changed at all Jātaka Tales Eric Van Horn,2020-05-16 The J taka Tales are the Buddhist equivalent of Aesop s Fables They are morality stories In the Buddhist cultures of that time these were the stories that children grew up hearing They were the popular entertainment of their time Families would gather together in the evening after the day s work was done and share these tales And it is from these stories that people learned about the standards of conduct for followers of the Buddha Like Aesop s Fables the main characters in these stories can be a king a merchant a craftsperson or an animal This collection contains stories 201 250 of the 547 total stories There are a number of stories about respect for one s elders J taka 202 even finds Sakka the God terrorizing a King who has mistreated elders J taka 237 repeats the story of Jataka 68 in which the Buddha tenderly shows respect for his parents from previous lives The longest story in this collection is J taka 234 in which a musician takes care of his blind parents It has a lovely scene in which the musician asks to be paid for his music by hearing the stories of devas who have been reborn in heaven due to their kindness And of course there are many stories involving monkeys In some of these the monkey is a villain but they can also be the heros In J taka 222 it is the Buddha himself who is a self sacrificing monkey and who tries to save his mother from a hunter In all these stories represent the breadth the human experience What we see is that in 2500 years the spectrum of experiences has not changed at all
