Building Bridges An Egypt Us Free Trade Agreement:

Building Bridges Ahmed Galal, Robert Z. Lawrence, 2001-06-07 In April 1997 Egyptian President Mubarak and U S Vice President Gore agreed to explore the possibility of creating a Free Trade Agreement FTA between Egypt and the United States The very idea of such an agreement has been met by controversy and skepticism from critics in both countries The authors of this book however believe that the case for considering an FTA between the U S and Egypt rests on solid economic and political grounds An agreement could help promote Egyptian economic reform and growth while providing substantial economic benefits to the U S Politically it could strengthen American ties with an ally who plays a crucial role in helping to achieve peace in the region and in maintaining a stable supply of oil in the Middle East This book offers U S and Egyptian policymakers answers to such pertinent questions as What form should an FTA agreement take Should it concentrate on border barriers or cover other aspects such as investments and services What are the likely implications for both countries And how will such an agreement affect the rest of the region Its conclusions will be relevant to policymakers elsewhere in their pursuit of similar regional trade agreements Copublished with the Egyptian Center for Economic Studies Building Bridges Ahmed Galal, Robert Z. Deep Integration, Nondiscrimination, and Euro-Mediterranean Free Trade Bernard M. Hoekman, Denise Eby Konan, 1999 Abstract May 1999 Preferential trade agreements that are limited to the elimination of tariffs for merchandise trade flows are of limited value at best and may be as easily welfare reducing as welfare enhancing It is important that preferential trade agreements go beyond eliminating tariffs and quotas to eliminating regulatory and red tape costs and opening up service markets to foreign competition Deep integration explicit government actions to reduce the market segmenting effect of domestic regulatory policies through coordination and cooperation is becoming a major dimension of some regional integration agreements led by the European Union Health and safety regulations competition laws licensing and certification regimes and administrative procedures such as customs clearance can affect trade in ways analogous to nontariff barriers even though their underlying intent may not be to discriminate against foreign suppliers of goods and services Whether preferential trade agreements PTAs can be justified in a multilateral trading system depends on the extent to which formal intergovernmental agreements are technically necessary to achieve the deep integration needed to make markets more contestable The more need for formal cooperation the stronger the case for regional integration Whether PTAs are justified regionally also depends on whether efforts to reduce market segmentation are applied on a nondiscriminatory basis If innovations to reduce transaction or market access costs extend to both members and nonmembers of a PTA regionalism as an instrument of trade and investment becomes more attractive Using a standard competitive general equilibrium model of the Egyptian economy Hoekman and Konan find that the static welfare impact of a deep free trade agreement is far greater than the impact that can be expected from a classic shallow agreement Under some scenarios welfare may increase by more than 10 percent of GDP compared with close to zero under a shallow agreement Given Egypt's highly diversified trading patterns a shallow PTA with the European Union could be merely diversionary leading to a small decline in welfare Egypt already has duty free access to the European Union for manufactures so the loss in tariff revenues incurred would outweigh any new trade created Large gains in welfare from the PTA are conditional on eliminating regulatory barriers and red tape in which case welfare gains may be substantial 4 to 20 percent growth in real GNP This paper a product of the Development Research Group is part of a larger effort in the group to analyze regional integration agreements The authors may be contacted at bhoekman@worldbank.org or konan.hawaii.edu

Investing in the Middle East Ashraf Mishrif, 2010-07-30 The effect of foreign direct investment FDI on economic development has been widely debated However the real challenge is not only to examine the effect of FDI on economic development but to also investigate the most appropriate economic policies that are conducive to increasing levels of FDI Ashraf Mishrif here addresses this challenge and examines the interplay between external and internal forces to determine whether recent EU Egyptian trade agreements have led to any significant improvement in Egypt's investment environment and in the growth levels of European direct investment in the country This important study makes a key contribution to our understanding of the inward investment strategies and options of the Arab World's most populous and powerful player It will be an essential point of reference for all economists bankers and investment advisors dealing with the Middle East

Political Regimes in the Arab World Ferran Izquierdo Brichs, 2012-11-27 One of the implications of Orientalism is that the Arab world as a homogenous entity is often analysed as an anomaly within the international system This book argues that despite their differences societies across the globe ultimately construct their own history according to very similar dynamics and tensions The methodological approach of this book using different countries within the Arab world as models offers the reader an analysis of relations between the elites and their opposition in a variety of settings A definition of the political structure of each country is drawn from this analysis before potential future scenarios as according to country specific experts are proposed This model provides a useful contribution to students and scholars of political science and international relations Through providing a comparative study of the political regimes currently operating in the Arab world their elites civil society power resources and political resistance this book illustrates that despite the image of homogeneity sometimes portrayed by the Arab world it is the multiplicity of models and heterogeneity of regimes that constitute reality Index
