

During the hot summer months, fish the limestone trout streams. These waters are usually higher and cooler than other trout streams at this time.

When the water is high and fast, look for trout in pockets behind rocks or boulders, along undercut banks or among washed-out tree of the current.

If the regular retrieves fail to work, try skittering your wet fly on top. This often wakes trout up and excites them.

Once a trout is disturbed or frightened, it will take a long time before he gets over his fright. Even when he does, he may be wary and hard to fool. A trout that hasn't been disturbed is more likely to hit a lure.
