

Anthropology is Comparative

- It involves comparison:
- between today's cultures in the "ethnographic present," whereby cultures are described as if they still existed—like these !Kung Bushmen in the 1950s (the job of ethnographers or cultural anthropologists)
- Between cultures that existed through time unrecorded by history—the job of archaeologists
- Between related species of the hominid family and hominin subfamily—Like "Lucy" according to this artist's conception (the job of paleoanthropologists)
- It asks the question: "Can what we learn from other cultures or related species be used to understand our own?"
