

Ethnography in a Time of Blurred Genres

SUMMARY Drawing from Francine Prose's Reading Like a Writer (2006), this article offers suggestions for reading ethnographies in a new way: with an eye toward learning how they were written and what literary feats they accomplished. In a time of blurred genres, the line between fiction and nonfiction has become increasingly indistinct and it is no longer so clear where ethnography is to be positioned. It is therefore important to reassess the possibilities and limits of ethnography as a literary genre if we are to understand the idiosyncrasies of its "art." [Keywords: blurred genres, ethnographic writing, autoethnography, history of anthropology, reflexivity]

Prologue

I think it's wonderful that we've come together for a special issue on the art of ethnography.

This must mean that we agree that ethnography has an "art." But there might be a slight problem: Does ethnography have an "art"? And there might be an even bigger problem: Do anthropologists truly want ethnography to have an "art"? I think most anthropologists would rather ethnography didn't have any "art" at all.

So what we have is a conundrum: If those of us who see or desire or dream of an "art" of ethnography are just a small minority in our discipline, might we be better off simply writing memoir or creative nonfiction or travel writing or chronicles or poetry? Beyond anthropology and a few academic disciplines, like education or composition and rhetoric, the genre of ethnography remains a mystery. Those who think they know what ethnography is tend to associate it with the social sciences and the careful scrutiny of social systems, rather than with artful forms of creative writing.

The question thus arises: for us, the artsy ethnographers, does thinking of our work as ethnography set us up to fail as would-be artists? And there's more: by calling our work ethnography, might we lose the chance to publish our work with mainstream publishers? Might we lose readers?

Finally, why should we stay loyal to ethnography? In a time of blurred genres—when fiction bleeds into memoir and vice versa—does it make sense to seek out a unique identity for ethnography, a genre which partakes of both

Anthropology And Literature:

Literary Anthropology Fernando Poyatos, 1988 The traditional gulf between the theory and practice of literature and the various areas subjoined under anthropology has hindered the development of some very fruitful perspectives in the realm of poetics and the general theory of literature particularly in its narrative forms Poyatos initial idea of literary anthropology as the study of people and their cultural manifestations through their national literatures without doubt the richest source of documentation of human life styles and the most advanced form of our projection in time and space and of communicating with contemporary and future generations has been enriched by the thoughts of a multi cultural group of scholars from both anthropology and literature who at a first symposium on the subject attempted to define this area leaving the way open to many more research possibilities Between Anthropology and Literature Rose De Angelis, 2003-08-27 This collection suggests that the disciplines of literature and anthropology are not static entities but instead fluid sites of shifting cultural currents and academic interests The essays conclude that the origins sources and intersections of the two disciplines are constantly being revised and reconceived leading to new possibilities of understanding texts The authors address the ways in which the language of social science fuses with that of the literary imagination The essays fit excellently with the current interest in interdisciplinary studies and challenge students to see texts as parts of a larger global and cultural matrix

Connor Wulff reveals how the making of a writer's career is built on the rhythms of writing long hours of writing in solitude alternate with public events such as book readings and media appearances. Rhythms of Writing is essential reading for students and scholars in anthropology, literary studies, creative writing, cultural studies, and Irish studies.

Anthropology as Memory Michael Mack, 2011-04-20 This essay is offered particularly as a contribution to the relationship between theological and literary writings on the Holocaust. Franz Baermann Steiner's 1909-1952 detailed sociological work he taught at the Department of Social Anthropology at Oxford and developed a sociology of danger that strongly influenced Mary Douglas, T. W. Adorno, Iris Murdoch, H. G. Adler, and Julia Kristeva contrasts with Canetti's emphasis on shock. Canetti's response to the Holocaust constitutes in Dominick LaCapra's terms an acting out of trauma, a comparison between Canetti's Masse und Macht and the anthropological texts he uses brings to the fore his bleak depiction of humanity. By contrast, Steiner, in comparison to Canetti, lays emphasis on working through the Holocaust, that is to say, on overcoming the paralysis of trauma by reflecting critically on values that might transform a damaged society. However, Canetti's depiction of humanity cannot entirely be seen in LaCapra's notion of acting out for through the shock of acting out. Canetti nonetheless wants to bring about a working through. Similarly, despite the working through shock and trauma are dramatized in Steiner's poetry and his aphoristic writings. Moreover, Canetti thematizes an ethical impact on his readership in his aphorisms. In response to the Holocaust, both writers advance a theory of power, what Steiner calls danger. Canetti attacks as death Steiner's and Canetti's respective responses to the Holocaust consists in a critique of static ways of thought, affirming metamorphosis and deconceptualized understanding of the world, which connects linguistic fluidity to the ever-changing contextualities of social and embodied life.
