

Securing enough demand for new generation is one of the most challenges which facing any national development plans, due to the growing electric energy demand and apart as a result of several kind fuel resources has the challenge to secure sufficient by utilization of its renewable energy resources, mainly wind, due to its economic potential and water is provided by Egypt's wind and solar power. Egypt has adopted an ambitious plan to cover 20% of the generated electricity by renewable energy by 2020 including a 12% contribution from wind energy. Generating more than 120 GW of renewable wind farms. Due to the high investment cost of solar energy technologies and limited in amount of space the world use the other kind wind energy has an enormous potential and increases a considerable contribution for the future potential for solar energy due to the limited world for wind energy. Current study will evaluate the Egyptian strategy for renewable energy up to 2020 and find how much the planned projects from the Egyptian government will fulfill its targets, the economic study and the required investment cost of these projects, and the environmental aspects of the renewable energy.
