STARLINGS

Fig. 4-48, 2-34

The starlings are all medium sized birds many of them with a more or less gray blue plumage. The fairly long, strong bills are arched and tend to be curved at the tips. Although all but the Wattled Starling are individual breeders, all species may gather in large flocks in the non-breeding season.

OUTCICKERS

Fig. 4-50

This interesting family is readily identified by its habit of traveling singly over the larger animals in search of ticks and other parasites. The bill is fairly deep, but flattened laterally. Although frequently misapprehended and mistreated, today these birds have been eliminated over large areas by the use of poisonous cattle dips. They are still commonly seen in the Bush country in southern Africa.
