The researchers used the descriptive research method to gather information about the respondents' demographic profile. The data obtained were analyzed using percentage weighted mean, significant relationship for the on the teaching styles and learners' academic performance utilizing 0.05 level of significance. Finding reveals that in terms of learning and teaching styles, it uncovers a strong preference for visual, auditory, kinesthetic, and reading/writing approaches among learners, and flexibility in instruction, individualized instruction, and differentiated instruction among teachers. A correlation is observed between these teaching styles and improved performance in English, Science, and Math.
